Other governance structures were also approved. The five-person Executive Committee, elected by the Council, was the coordinating arm of the School. It had the power to make non-controversial decisions and to consult with the Dean in emergencies, making decisions if necessary.

The Education Assembly was instituted as the major advisory body of the School. It included pretty much anyone who was interested and met at least once a semester.

The Graduate Assembly, primarily graduate faculty, was in sole charge of graduate admissions and degrees.

Instead of departments, the Community began the concept of Centers. Currently, there are twleve of them, ranging from touchy-feely Humanistic Education to Urban Education. Each Center self-destructs in three years, unless their rationale for existence is approved by the Council. Faculty and students may belong to more than one Center, thus achieving a great flexibility and interdisciplinary approach.

The governing structure was approved by both faculty, graduate students, and the Dean in 1969. The lessoning of faculty power made not a few faculty in and out of the School resentful of Dean Allen. Education as a democratic procedure between mature students and faculty had never been tried before in a public university on the Allen scale.

In 1969, Education went Pass-Fail for all but Master's Candidates. The reputation of the School of Ed began to grow among undergraduates chiefly on the rumor that Pass-Fail courses were guts, and that you could do anything you want at the School of Ed.

Unfortunately for the vast majority of undergrads, it was not true. Instead of innovation, there was rhetoric. Instead of flexibility, there was an elusive, chaotic bureaucracy. Dwight Allen's timetable was to first make the graduate school the greatest in the Country (primarily because UMass had the only public doctoral program of any stature in Massachusetts), and then develop the undergraduate programs. Thus, much of undergrad anarchy that existed and still exists to an extent was due to the upheaval of and concentration of efforts on the graduate students.

To this day, the consequences of the policy are seen in the fact that administrators, faculty and graduate students, even if they are directly involved with undergrads, are woefully incapable of communicating what is going on in the School to their charges. Every Marathon, every counseling period, the same hassles develop, with the School of Ed people wondering if their notices will get in the Collegian, whether students will read them, whether the students will understand this new policy or term or innovation. It seems that the only sure things are death, taxes, and the ability of the School of Ed to come up with something new in a hurry.

Understand this about the School of Ed: the School of Education is not THE School of Education; it is a conglomeration of hundreds of complex, diverse people. The School is not merely a question of pro-Dwight or anti-Dwight factions.

Accordingly, many faculty and graduate students began to see the need for improved undergraduate programs and communications. In 1971, the Teacher Preparation Program Council (TPPC) was established after intense debate about the School's commitment to undergrad teacher preparation. The TPPC now has the duty to coordinate all undergraduate teacher programs. In the spirit of Dwight's competing and alternative programs, the TPPC, under the leadership of Dr. Richard Clark, invited anyone in the School to come up with proposals. There will be for the fall, 1972, about twenty of these certification programs, sponsored by both individuals and by Centers.

Competing and alternative systems has been an underlying philosophy of not only the TPPC programs, but of other School projects. And like others of the School's goals, this is one that seems to have diffused from Dwight's mind into his School, and too, like others, it is not universally accepted. This kind of educational capitalism has flourished, however, and can be seen in the numerous projects which faculty and students are involved in.

The programs have ranged from the Tororo Girls' School in Uganda to an Integrated Day-Open Classroom here in Amherst. They have attacked the problems of educational innovation (studying the realities of the affective curriculum, differentiated staffing, and comprehensive achievement monitoring), the difficulties of urban and rural schools (Hartford, Worcester, vocational and agricultural education, and projects in cities as far away as Pasadena and Belfast), and just about anything anyone in the School had an idea about (Media Center for the Deaf, University Without Walls, and Adult Basic Education).

Faculty and doctoral students were encouraged by the ethos of the School to learn how to write proposals and apply for grants for their ideas. During 1970-1971, 3.6 million dollars were given the School from outside sources of funding. Today, about two-thirds of the budget comes from this "soft", outside money.

This immense size of money, controlled generally not by the Dean, but by a faculty or doctoral student "director," has predictably caused some headaches. In the summer of 1970, the State Auditor's Office disclosed some discrepancies in the budget. Apparently, they have been explained, but the chaos and traditional American attitude of "do your own thing" still raises many internal questions of administration and accountability.

One effort to straighten out the economic uncertainty of the School came a couple of years ago when Dwight appointed Phyllis Roop as his first Assistant Dean for Administration. Dean Roop and her successor, Bob Suzucki, (Phyllis stepped down last year to take another position) began to put the "hard" money--the annually budgeted general support fund from the State--in order. They eliminated most W.A.T.S. line phones, restricted the xeroxing budget (gone is the traditional mimeo from the School), and generally tried to explain to both the School and the Whitmore administrators what was happening.

Among that which was happening was a doubling of undergraduate education majors and a tripling of undergraduate enrollment in courses (from 2,101 in fall, 1968 to 6,234 a year ago last spring) without the necessary compensations in the regular allocations from the Legislature. At one point, there were approximately (one is never sure in matters like these) five half-time graduate students as advisors for more than 1500 education majors. This didn't even take into account others outside the School who wanted secondary certification.

Following the example of Dwight Allen's leadership, the Education community early set out to eliminate many of the injustices perpetrated on minorities trying to enter colleges or trying to find administrative or faculty positions. (Dwight's five assistant deans include a Black woman, a Jew, an Oriental, and another Black. He has appointed numerous Black faculty and graduate students.) Currently 85% of all grad students in the University are in the School of Ed.For the fall, each Center has voluntarily set its goals on a 50% admission of minority students.

One of the more controversial ideas from Dwight's famous "laundry list" (others call it less glamorously, "bag of tricks") is modularization. What it is has been demonstrated twice a year since 1968 when the first Marathon was held: a breaking down of the traditional boundaries of education-- courses, regular hours, and credits. There are many learning experiences, Phil Christenson, the Director of the Modular Credit Program, has said, that are unable to fit in a Monday and Wednesday time slot, from 9:05 until 9:55.

These experiences may last ten minutes; they may last ten days. To the proverbial joke, "Why did the chicken cross the road? —To get a modular credit", proponents of modularization retort that chickens crossing the road for credit is one way to undermine the entire system of learning for immoral, false reinforcements, rather than learning as a good unto itself.

Well, the proponents of modularization have had their way, along with a little financial help from the Carnegie Foundation, and should nothing go wrong, the entire School of Education will have a Completely Modular Curriculum by the end of this year.

A lot of things in the School of Education, indeed, a lot of things in Dwight Allen's thoughts and ebullient personality, upset quite a few people in the last few years.

After giving provisional approval to Pass-Fail and to more than 150 new "experimental" courses in the School, after seeing the power of its Education faculty swallowed up by "that crazy man" and his doctoral students (not a few of the education faculty complained or filed official grievances, although most of the faculty apparently agreed with Dwight in that in 1968, they agreed by a democratic vote to share their power), after realizing that Oz Tippo's appointee was more radical than even the Provost had ever dared to be, after reading about some of the ideas and philosophies many in the School were now exposing, after not having had much contact with people in the School (or vice versa, as most faculty and grad students seemed at times to be oblivious to the rest of campus), and after listening to complaints from undergraduates that often amounted to malpractice on behalf of the School, a committee of the University Faculty Senate produced an evaluation of the School in 1971. It was damning.

The evaluation questioned Pass-Fail. It questioned the intellectual rigor of courses. It questioned admission criteria. It questioned the School's ability to cope with undergraduates. And it took serious note of the lack of faculty power. The Committee appeared to many, notably a non-education professor writing anonymously in Spectrum magazine, to be evaluating a revolutionary School on the basis of the Faculty Senate's own 19th ideals of non-universal, elitest, "liberal" education.

While thunderstorms were thundering on the outside, dark clouds were condensing on the inside.

Personality conflicts, arising self-image of faculty as faculty, disagreements with actions of the Dean, disgust at the seemingly endless state of change, unhappiness over the limit of School Council powers, philosophical disagreements, and finally, a feeling that what democratic power did exist, it could at any time be taken away by the Dean who had given it, were become everyday topics of hallway conversation. In typical School of Ed fashion, as if to compound the complications, two differing views never emerged; hundreds of differing degrees of differing viewpoints surfaced.

Dissatisfaction within the on-campus Career Opportunities Program (COP) proved to be the dynamite that eventually forced cancellation of the spring, 1972 Marathon and has people all around the State asking, "What the hell is happening at the School of Ed this time?"

The Center for Urban Education runs three of the Federally funded COP programs--on campus, in Brooklyn (New York), and in Worcester. The Brooklyn and Worcester COPs are nationally regarded, and, after their initial organizational problems, seem to be preparing over 250 paraprofessionals in low income areas for teacher certification more than adequately. (So popular has UMass been in Brooklyn, that when local New York colleges complained about the out-of-state intruders, the students themselves defended the School of Ed.)

COP students on-campus began complaining about the lack of organization and coherency in the program last fall. The breaking point was reached early in April when it was announced that stipends would be delayed. (Information is sketchy, rumors abundant as to the details, especially since negotiations began.) Students in on-campus COP took their allegations to the School's Committee on Racism.

The Committee on Racism was the outgrowth of an endorsement by the School Council in May, 1971, of the "Nantucket Manifesto"; the Manifesto, an outgrowth of a faculty retreat on Nantucket Island, stated that racism was "the central pathology of our time" and committed the School to combatting institutionalized racism.

By April 5, 1972, after meetings with the Deans, the Committee on Racism disbanded itself, asserting that the School's commitment against racism was a liberal hype. Members and sympathizers of the Committee's position formed the Minority Caucus and the Non-Minority Caucus. Then, the Minority Caucus was declared open to all people of color on campus, and representatives of the Afro-Am Department and the Third World Alliance joined in what was to become a complicated situation. The Steering Committee of the Third World Caucus (read School of Ed Minority Caucus, unaffiliated with the Third World Alliance) became the negotiating body of the Caucus. The Committee consisted of School of Ed faculty (including the two former Chairpersons of the Racism Committee,Gloria Joseph and William Tutman), graduate students, and undergraduates (including Paul Chandler, the COP student who appeared to be a major spokesman for many COP students). Preston Bruce, an Education faculty member, became the Caucus spokesman.

The Caucus demanded that the Dean cancel the Marathon of April 18-21, because the Marathon allegedly exploited Third World peoples by advertising its theme as "combatting institutionalized racism". By the middle of the week, Tom Paquin, the Director of the Marathon had rebutted the argument by alleging that the Collegian had misrepresented the Marathon theme, that in reality, there was no theme.

Meanwhile, a polarization was occuring. If you were not for Dwight, you were against him. The Caucus found itself being supported not only by those who truly believed that the School had certain racist policies, but by those who had personal grudges against Dwight and his appointees, by faculty who were resentful of growing student and Dean power, by those who felt the School community should "protect Dwight from himself", and by those outside the School of Education who were hardly aware of what a Marathon was, let alone the complex politics of the whole struggle.

Dwight (if he, indeed, is the other side) was supported by not only those who sincerely believed that Marathon combatted racism, but by people who did not like the tactics of the Caucus (physically blockading doors), racists who never did like blacks anyway, and by those who had personal grudges against people in the Caucus, as well as people who were hardly aware of what the "Third World" is.

Succeeding faculty meetings and School Council meetings unearthed serious division in the School of Education. Faculty, for the first time in four years, began talking publicly about protecting faculty rights, perhaps taking their parochial perceptions from the union-organizing Faculty Senate or the student-centered debates about whether to allow academic classes in "student-owned" buildings. The School Council began debate on the merits of asserting itself and grabbing more power in this ideal identity-crisis solving opportunity. It seemed that as the week progressed, every conceivable sort of conviction and/or ego trip ventured forth into the world, including a very justifiable request from a woman for people to stop smoking in the School of Ed Auditorium, as it was stifling hot and considerably suffocating.

By now, everyone knows that the Marathon was cancelled, and that negotiations between the Caucus, the Executive Committee of the Council, and the Deans are taking place.

Perhaps it is too early to start writing an obituary for Dwight Allen. He has the ability to bend and compromise, to adapt to situations, without compromising himself. But if the negotiations reach an impasse, if Chancellor Bromery says that Dwight cannot handle his own School, if what is not a race issue turns into one, if the Faculty Senate bares its pernicious fangs, if the Completely Modular Curriculum falls on its face next fall, then Dwight Allen may have no choice but to resign. He is, after all ultimately responsible to the Trustees for what happens in the School of Education, no matter how much democracy there is.

Dwight Allen has ability, and he knows it. And he knows that his kind of ability can not function in a world of men who set their goals not on freedom, but on power, who do not differentiate between ego and dictatorship, who refuse to divest themselves of interests that are in the long run harmful for all of man.

If UMass rids itself of "that crazy man", of his obnoxious custom-made sport shirts, of his no-cal cola, of his strange ideas, no doubt, the first floor men's room in the School of Education will get a lot cleaner. But if Dwight Allen leaves, the troubles for the University of Massachusetts will just begin.

Singles: Part Two

BY JEFF HANSON

The purpose of all this writing is to get people interested in singles. I can write reams about records like "Big Leg Emma" by the Mothers, or "Man of the World" by Fleetwood Mac, or "Long Tall Sally" by the Kinks, but none of it would increase 45 sales by a cent, because these records are virtually impossible to get. So, to use a word heard much too much around a college campus, I'd better get at least a little relevant. At the beginning of each article, I'll try to at least mention the newer singles so people are aware of them. God knows it's hard enough getting singles that are still "available", so some work is going to be necessary to get these records, but at least there's a chance, especially with bigger artists.

Two of the Beatles head this week's list. Ringo has out "Back Off Boogaloo/Blindman" (Apple 1849). Paul McCartney's Wings have "Give Ireland Back To The Irish, Versions One and Two" (Apple 1847). I think the A sides of both of these records are great; Ringo's takes a while to really get to you but it's worth it. The B sides are another matter. The Rascals have "Lucky Day/Love Letter" (Columbia 4-45491). T. Rex' "Telegram Sam" (b/w "Baby Strange" & "Cadillac") made it to the top of the British charts in two weeks. This doesn't necessarily imply quality, however, T. Rex can make good records, but another Beatles they're not, and this record proves it. Peter Green returns from the grave (there's a nifty pun for those of you who know what Green did after his solo album some time back) with "Beasts of Burden" on British Reprise; he shares the billing with his brother-in-law Nigel Watson. McGuinness Flint has their third single out with "Let the People Go" (~~British Blue Mountain~~; this, like Wings' record, has been banned by the BBC.

Finally, mention of an excellent album. Reprise has released a double album made up in large part of singles made by the Kinks; it's called "The Kink Kronikles" (Reprise 2xS 6454). Not all of the Kinks singles are on it, unfortunately, but there is to be a sequel. Buy it! The only sour note about the whole thing is that Reprise waited until the Kinks moved on to RCA to make this stuff available; since there will be no new Kinks material for Reprise, they have released this, thereby implying that it is second class material, or it would have been available long ago. If the Kinks were still on Reprise, would this record be out today? I doubt it. I am also convinced that there will be quite a few more albums out with repeated material, except for maybe a cut or two to make sure the real Kinks fanatic buys it. Still, the record is out, and you should buy it.

Any complaints I have about Reprise are dwarfed by London Records. Since the Rolling Stones have moved to Atlantic, they have released (in England) three albums of old Stones material, none of which, except possibly the first, contained records not on albums. All this applies to the British audience, as all the material on those albums is available to us on American albums. Over here three collections of "hits" by the Stones have been released, and on none of them does "Sad Day", or "We Love You", or "Child of the Moon" appear. The Neanderthals at London have never been too bright (remember the flap they made over the original cover of Beggars Banquet?) but it would seem to be obvious to any record company that any "new" material, even if five years old, would bring in more money than the third or fourth pressing of things like "Ruby Tuesday". One album of hits is fine enough for all the dance parties in Christendom (and beyond); the rationale for putting out three of them, while there is nine years worth of 45 material available, utterly escapes me.

All of which brings us to the 45s of the Rolling Stones. It seems nearly impossible that the first Stones single is nearly a decade old. "Come On/I Want to be Loved" (British Decca F 11675) was released the same year Kennedy was killed in Dallas. It is available on a German album, but this is as hard, or harder, to get than the single, which is probably still available in England. The stereo on the German record emasculates the single anyway. "Come On" is a Chuck Berry record; "I Want to be Loved" is a Willie Dixon number. Both are fast paced numbers with heavy emphasis on bass and drums. Much reliance is placed on Brian's harmonica. The vocals aren't too impressive; take into account that this was the first single. Mick's awful pronunciation of words on the B side is embarrassing; "I axe you to dance", "I wants to be loved", etc. "Come On" is way better than that.

The second single was "I Wanna Be Your Man/Stoned". The A side is available in the USA as the B side of "Not Fade Away" (London 9657). The B side is available on the German album mentioned earlier. From the first note in "I Wanna Be Your Man," you knew things weren't going to be quite the same. Keith's incredible guitar solo, Bill and Charlie driving the number right along (especially Bill), and Mick's vocal all add up to a tightly controlled hysteria. This record is so far above the Beatles that there is no real comparison; odd, as John and Paul wrote it. The flip side is totally different. The highlight of this instrumental is Ian Stewart's piano playing. It's a nice little number, but it's hard to listen to it after the exuberance of side one.

Next comes an EP. This type of record is pretty much extinct. (Or is it? Maybe it's just come back disguised as the Maxi-single.) There are four tracks on this one, called simply "The Rolling Stones" (British Decca DFE 8560); only one, "You Better Move On", was ever released in the States (and that quite some time later–on the fifth US album! Remember what I said about London earlier?) The A side has Chuck Berry's "Bye Bye Johnny" and the R & B standard "Money". Both are out and out rockers, a type replaced often on albums by slower, more bluesy things. It's not hard to imagine the reaction these numbers got in places like the Marquee Club in London, just as the Stones were really breaking big. I kind of doubt that anything quite like that will ever be seen again. Sure, there's still hysteria over groups, but all the groups still causing it are largely following in someone else's footsteps. And everyone is a whole lot more jaded, or whatever. Also there is not such a sterile vacuum to smash–or is there?

Anyway, "Poison Ivy" is the fourth number and, for me, the best. It's the old Coasters song; I have no idea why I like it as much as I do, but I do. (Neil Innes handled statements like that handily on the fourth Bonzo Dog album, so I'm not going to explain it.)

The EP called "got Life if you want it" (British Decca DFE 8620) contains material thrown onto various albums–"I'm Alright," "I'm Moving On," "Route 66." But there is a medley of "Everybody Needs Somebody to Love" (which lasts about thirty seconds) and "Pain in My Heart" (which is pretty much full length.) There is also in existence a live version of "Off the Hook" (probably only a tape), and a British EP with "Little Red Rooster" sung in French. Now that I think of it, there is a record of "As Tears Go By" in Italian. Hearing Mick sing in Italian is, like the ad says, a totally unique experience.

"19th Nervous Breakdown" has been on a few albums; "Sad Day", the B side of it, has never been on an album. (London 9823). A short digression here–all, or nearly all, these numbers have been on one or more bootlegs. The quality is pretty horrendous on the ones I've heard, so buy the singles if you can; they are pretty much available in England. Back to "Sad Day." It opens with a nice little acoustic guitar flourish, which appears in various places throughout the song. The lyrics are the typical "Dear John" type common in rock and roll; the narrator tells us about his bad dream (woman trouble). Then he gets his mail, "not even expecting a bill," and finds the letter. "There is only one thing in this world that I can't understand; that's a girl." The backing is typical Stones of the period, but listen to the rhythm guitar.

"Paint It Black" in England had a B side never released in America–"Long Long While." (British Decca F 12395). In places it is quite reminiscent of "Lady Jane" and (yet to come) "Ruby Tuesday." Piano couplets sound suspiciously like "Every Little Bit Hurts," an organ appears for a few passages, the band is pretty restrained, except in the choruses. In this song, the singer is the one who was wrong, not his girl (Dare I use that word?). I have always thought "Paint It Black" was the worst Stones single, so perhaps this explains somewhat why I don't really like "Long Long While."

The jacket to "Have You Seen Your Mother, Baby, Standing In The Shadow?/Who's Driving My Plane" (London 45-903) is pretty famous. The back has the Stones dressed up in women's clothing–Bill as a cripple in a wheelchair. It's a pretty passable imitation, too, until you look at Mick. No one is ever going to mistake him for a woman, ever; his picture makes the whole thing kind of funny, kind of ridiculous. This picture is worth a thousand Dave Dee & Co. records. "Who's Driving My Plane" opens sounding like the Stones earliest records. The mood changes quickly as a "barrelhouse" piano comes in and Charlie becomes a real basher. The record is quite similar to what Dylan was doing at the time; at first one thinks of the "Highway 66" and "Blond on Blond" bands. Then Mick starts to use vocal stylings similar to Dylan's. And the lyrics are a mixture of the Stones and Dylan, about a girl in confusion. The resemblance to Dylan is really prominent in the last verse, both in style and lyric.

There's a lot more territory here than I bargained for, as Lewis and Clark might have said. This is a pretty good place to break off--the next single is "Dandelion/We Love You," products of the summer of 1967, which changed the Rolling Stones as much as it did everyone else. There does seem to be some sort of delineation between "Have You Seen . . ." and "Dandelion," though the change was most noticeable in the Stones albums. So next time I'll deal with the rest of the Stones singles. Also one of the better newly rising groups will be looked at – Spiggy Topes and the Turds, who have just put out a great single called "Some Like It Hot."

A Document Of That Rank Period

Eddie Cochran: Legendary Masters Series #4; United Artists UAS-9959

By JEFF CLAYTON

Eddie Cochran understood the fifties as well as anyone, so if you want a document of the time, or an understanding of what that rank period in our history meant, or a souvenir of it, or if you just like the music, this thing is for you. You can keep it in the closet and bring it out at odd times (like 1:00, 3:00, 5:00 in the morning) so the guys next door can enjoy "Hallelujah, I Love Her So." If that's not worth the price of the album, I don't know what is.

In fact, this $6.98 list double has enough high spots to make it just worth your while if you value your roots, or even if you remember them. Eddie suffered a blowout on his limo and died when I was still too short to reach the volume knob, so I don't have exactly the most desireable critical perspective on him, but I can still get excited over the two rocking sides. No one ever did better on Eddie's own "Summertime Blues" until the Who, and now, well, it's not the same song. "Come On Everybody", Cochran's No. 2 all-time hit is also rock 'n' roll at its primitive finest, complete with the twang of huge hollow-body Gibsons, no-fooling drums, and the historic bass sounding like a rubber band stretched across a cigar box...at some point in the proceedings the drummer was using a cigar box as I recall, and it sounds fantastic. No one outside of NRBQ ever works with the primevil twang; a terrible situation.

So here we got a number of obvious choices, like "Cut Across Shorty", "Blue Suede Shoes", "Bo Weevil", and "Long Tall Sally." They're all well-done in the best tradition as you might expect. Solid, but not amazing. A word should be said here about Cochran's guitar work, which is that of a virtuoso in every way. He was 15 or 16 at the time of some of these recordings, but already the master of the repetoire, and the roller-bridge tailpiece, that favorite gadget of his contemporaries. Eddie is one of the "Legendary Masters" to whom the term really applies; he was considering a career as a studio musician just prior to his sniffing. His voice is nothing to snuff at, either. He may not hit all the notes exactly, but the power's there. Unfortunately, he abuses his talent all over the second and most of the fourth sides. He never could quite decide between rock 'n' roll and country music, so sides 2 and 4 are primarily mawky embarrassing slush. If his guitar owes a debt to Bill Haley, his slow vocal numbers are plainly Extract of Elvis, with all the quavery heartbreaker frills hanging out all over. Priceless, but pretty repulsive; they give me the cold sweats every time. "Pretty Little Devil". "Three Stars", "Sittin' in the Balcony"....once is more 'n enough.

The songs Cochran wrote with Jerry Capehart stand up by themselves, though. "Milk Cow Blues" is a registered classic, "Pink Pegged Slacks" a nice joke, "Something Else" a gut-buster, "Twenty Flight Rock" an alleged saga of impotence. "Fourth Man Theme" and "Eddie's Blues" presage the rise of the artificial phenomenon, Surf Music with long, long sway-bar glissandoes, as in Hot Rod movie music, which they may originally have been for all I know. In fact a late-night TV review of Thunder Road might just be the spiritual preparation you need for this album. Who remembers duck-tails? Making out and getting hot? For ten points, how old were you when it happened?

Next Week

As it turned out Steve Funicella of East Hadley Road, Amherst correctly identified the five mystery musicians found in our twenty-second issue. They were John McLaughlin, Buddy Miles, Archie Shepp, Robert Welch and Gene Vincent. Next week a similar contest will be held with more recognizable personnel. Also next week we'll look into the latest albums by Stephen Stills, Janis Joplin, Cat Mother and maybe some surprises. Next Friday will be our final issue so we hope to see you again in the fall.

Albums

"Keep On Rock', Don't Look Back"

Jimi Hendrix, "Isle Of Wight", Polydor (English album) 2302 016 SUPER, times not given.

By MIKE KOSTEK

"One, two. Bit more volume on this one, Cha'ley. It's gonna need it. Let's have a big hand for Beely Cox on bass, Mitch Mitchell on drumes, and the man with the guitar, Jimi Hen'rex."

The Isle of Wight Festival in August, 1970 turned out to be the last performance of The Jimi Hendrix Experience. Jimi had dropped the Experience from the name more than a year before, but he still was an experience to behold. I was fortunate enough to see him at Woodstock, and I have never seen any individual with more power, talent and verve than Hendrix. Jagger, Zappa, Townshend, et al fade before him. I can't imagine any performer able to climb the musical limbs that he did and pull his schemes off so perfectly. His white Stratocaster was turned up about three times as loud as imagaination would allow, and his prowess at playing it can't be possibly overestimated. Jimi won the battle of thirty or so bands at Woodstock, overcoming stiff competition from The Who, Canned Heat and Country Joe & the Fish. And yet the thing was that Hendrix's band was thrown together, and had rehearsed for only a few days. Jimi was the entire show. He alone beat The Who, and if you've ever seen The Who, you know what a fantastic accomplishment that is. What's more, The Who were doing their Tommy tour, so Jimi beat the original rock opera.

Hendrix was such a giant that his last series of live concerts are being released all over the place, both by bootleggers and by the straight record companies. So far I count nine albums with Jimi Hendrix live on them. Nine! To get the significance of this, just imagine that there were nine Janis Joplin live records out. Stretching her talent pretty thin? Yes. But with Hendrix it's quite different as Janis always sang her songs in pretty much the same manner with the same arrangements while Jimi was constantly jamming, and rearranging his old standards and never playing two concerts that were exactly the same.

However one of Jimi's main impediments was the bizarre fans he attracted with his first album, Are You Experienced?. This album was so good and primal that it attracted a tremendous amount of fans who were driven by primal urges to such an extent that they loved the early Jimi so much that they never wanted him to change or grow or branch out. They always yearned for "Purple Haze" and screamed for him to play his guitar for the finale. Jimi was happy to comply at first, but after a while he got fed up and went through lots of self-re-evaluation in terms of his success and what he had to say. "I don't want to be a clown anymore." said Jimi, and I can't think of any sadder quote. After fooling around with Buddy Miles and "Sky Church Rainbow Gypsies music" for awhile he went back to the original Experience formula with Cox and Mitchell, and was indeed playing his classics again,although his stage antics were a bit toned down. It was in this awkward frame of mind that Jimi came to the Isle of Wight. And so Isle of Wight captures the Hendrix caught trying to play both worlds, old and new, and doing an excellent job of it.

After his introduction, the band starts into a half-new song, "Midnight Lightning". I say half-new because it and one other included here, "Foxey Lady" appeared in a sloppy musical pastiche on one side of an album released in the U.S. called The First Great Rock Festivals Of The Seventies featuring groups at both the Isle of Wight and Atlanta Pop Festivals. However, the editors of the package saw fit to trade quality for quantity in regards to Jimi, and they whittled "Midnight Lightning" and "Foxey Lady" into hollow, punchless shells. No, friends, if you were disappointed by Hendrix on First Great Festivals, it wasn't his fault.

Anyway, in its uncut version "Midnight Lightning" is a pretty standard Hendrix electric blues, but with mean, ugly lyrics that are painful to listen to because you know that every word is true: "I feel like I been run over by public opinion and the past...but keep on rockin', don't look back." One line in particular stands out as incredibly prophetic: "Got to keep on lovin', good sweet lovin'. Make love in my dyin' bed." Which, of course, he did two weeks later.

"Midnight Lightning" ends and Jimi is ready to wrap it up. "I'd like to say thanks for the last three years. Maybe we'll get together sometime". All this time he's holding that opening feedback note of "Foxey Lady", and he bends it, making it wail and shriek. Holding, holding, holding, holding as it builds up. Finally he lets it go and it runs into the song. Extremely powerful intro, best appreciated when heard at a volume three times as loud as imagination would allow. The band does a fine job on this track, with Mitch playing clear and precise figures. Kudos for Carlos Olms who did a fine mixing job on the album, emerging with a sound that is much clearer than that on the First Great Festivals or on In The West. Strangeness happens in the middle of "Foxey Lady" and Jimi dies out, and he goes over to his amp and tunes in the BBC, which fits in perfectly with the stop-go rhythms of the song. Well, he occasionally discredited himself as "just playing my radio..."

The "Lady" ends and Jimi said in a feigned-hurt showbiz manner, "You'all want to her all those old songs? Damn, man. We're just trying to get some other things together. I just've been recording some little things...I dunno...Here's something more familiar." Bang, right into "Lover Man", but you can hear the dismay and frustration in Jimi's voice as he jokingly pleads with the crowd to relax and let him play what he wants. You can also hear people yelling for "Fire" and "Hey Joe". So Jimi, always wanting to please, shoots into "Lover Man" and it's just about the same runthrough as on In The West. Good cut. Fine side.

Side two starts with "Freedom", and it's given a satisfactory runthrough, although there are about five seconds of terrible, lame guitar in his solo, and I guess I've been spoiled, because I realized that I've come to expect absolute excellence from him. Total brilliance, and I was shocked to recall never having heard anything but the finest from him. Not one note!

Next is the barnburner, "All Along The Watchtower". Since the studio cut on Electric Ladyland is the finest cover version of someone doing someone else's song that I've ever heard, I was expecting a lot, but the live version on here just doesn't match the fantastic studio version. Some nice singing, done with echo, and some new guitar licks, always new guitar, every song, but it is a bit rough.

Finally, "In From The Storm". Here Jimi drives the song through its paces, with a nice drum introduction by Mitch kicking off. You really notice the fine mixing here, as the listener seems to be sitting right on the drummers throne. Again, the vocal is a bit rough, and somehow it doesn't seem fitting that this should be his last song ever, but there we are. The feedback passages near the middle that made the studio version so tight and powerful are weak and almost flaccid. The final beautiful riff from Jeff Beck's "Rice Pudding" and the end. "Hope to see you again real soon. Peace, love and all that other bullshit." The record fades out with the announcer asking for a big hand for the Jimi Hendrix Experience. It's all cycles I guess.

A friend at Columbia bought this for me in New York City. It'll set you back almost five, but no Hendrix lover can be without it. As for you others, well, this here isn't his best, but it sounds mighty good compared to most of the other things I hear today. Jimi Hendrix was 24 when he died, and now we're left with Geeks like Todd Rundgren, who claims he's America's finest guitarist, ahead of Leslie West...ga-ga...ga- ga...

Ha, Ha Violence

(Conceptionland And Other States Of Mind; the Conception Corporation–Cotillion Records)

BY CHRISTOPHER SOPHINOS

As the world revolves, evolves, and grows, so does man. But man seems to move on several tracks, and like the earth's revolution, one is back from whence it came. A specific development, similarly cyclical, is the outgrowth of the Conception Corporation, but here more importantly, their present recording.

"Conceptionland and Other States of Mind" reflects the many aspects of American society- a society ill in health. Ill because it has been shown its faults, yet continues to live with them. One of these basic faults is the desensitization and acceptance of violence- not merely as aggressive solutions but existing for its own sake. This appears to be part of the album's method for inducing laughter. Side One of the album features eight distinct cuts, reflecting much of the controversy present today- with education, death, youth, media, law, abortion, prison, and even marijuana. Truly satirical, the album plays up significant conflicting ideas between the old and younger generations. It does not delve into the eight specific problem areas, nor is it expected to, but it exploitingly expounds upon them. As an example, cut 3, "An Open Letter to the Youth of America" has one of the 4 members of the Conception Corporation, either Murphy Dunne, Jeff Begun, Ira Miller, or Howard R. Cohen, speaking to a crowd with a voice like Walter Brennan. The speech discusses youth's disrespect for the older generations hard won values- among them money.

To me the album concentrates on aspects too real to be funny. The plight of getting an abortion reflects a lack of communication in our society. A gap well depicted in the selection "Wholesome Prison Blues", sung of course by Johnny Cash?? But the pain is real, the prisoners' screams ring out now, and the Corporation's echoing of prison's contribution to criminality desensitizes us to this reality. Yet we laugh at this trauma.

Often laughing does come easy. On a tour of Heaven we come across a bit of philosophy from none other than Confucious, "Girls who fly upside down," but the joke is left for us to fill, like a crack in the bust of a figure. Our roaring continues to Side Two, which consists of a journey in a carnival, appropriately called "Conceptionland". Here we ride whether violence is truly "The Ego Trip", that famous humorous. This ride takes us coaster "The Downer", and the around floating bodies, wailing infamous Titanic. But here with children, abused servants, and "The Voyage of the Titanic" we self-serving fools. But the get back to the realization of laughing continues as we visit "The Mad Doctor", "The Wizard", and "The Great Predicto". We chuckle as we see the fabulous "Dope-a-matic" being demonstrated, but shirk as we find the shooting gallery with Vietnamese babies on sticks as targets. Hopefully one can by-pass these episodes to feel the beauty in others. How about asking for some cotton candy and hear the vendor say: "Sorry, we're out, how about a cue tip?" Or maybe- "Kool-Aid, Kool-Aid here," and then telling a girl who comes to the stand with a cut finger that she doesn't want Kool-Aid, but First Aid around the corner to the...

The album does have some good voice/music mixes on it, done by a band called "Rock City and the Bhang Gang", but they could be more impressive. Everything is built on a very superficial level, going no further, and leaving no room for self-projection. It just doesn't have the depth of a Firesign album, for after three or so listenings you know everything, and it sounds old. Unfortunately, violence isn't old, being kept alive with reenforcement from conditioning mechanisms that desensitize us to reality, only our actions can change that. My reaction to this album suggests mine, what's yours?

Rundgren Not Quite There Yet

TODD RUNDGREN
At the Stadium, April 30.
BY STEVE FELD

"Now let's get the fuck out of here," popstar Todd Rundgren muttered under his breath after his haphazard rendezvous here Sunday. From his point of view it was a complete fiasco plagued with every problem imaginable, enough that would make any musician think twice about the business he's in. This was an out-of-the-way, pain-in-the-ass of a gig, that somehow fit in between stops at Chicago and Philadelphia. It had to be done, of course, but solely for the sake of getting it over with. And getting the fuck out of here.

Todd, 23, and his entourage arrived in Boston after a Saturday night concert in Chicago, during which he got quite drunk and accidentally smashed up his favorite guitar, a Gibson. Their two rented station wagons arrived at the concert site from Boston seventy-five minutes late, just as Brother Ralf, a tight and exciting group from Boston, was finishing their set. Circumstances dictated that I would be Todd's emissary and guide.

"Welcome to Massachusetts, Todd."

"Is that where I am?"

Five minutes later found us in the makeshift dressing room–on the seventh floor of Kennedy tower. Besides Todd, there were the six members of his back-up group, The Hello People, an equipment manager, the road manager, and a big black dog named O'Ryan that got left in the car for most of the time, much to his chagrin. Todd wanted to take a shower, the group wanted to eat–so it was off to Munchy's while "the all-around rock 'n' roll whiz kid" got himself acquainted with a Southwest bathroom.

Talking with The Hello People, I found them very aware of Todd's talents, and all admit that the kid is the most promising and prolific rock performer to hit the scene in quite a while. The group just met Todd a few weeks back and intend to stay with him only until the end of this current tour. Most of them are originally from New York. They were tired from touring and all expressed their desire to "get this thing over with." The group took a surface interest in the campus, one asking about the School of Agriculture, another about the dubious architecture. On the way back to JFK someone spotted a notice for the Beatles concert film that was shown in Mahar a few days earlier. This perked them up, and it was revealed that one member played with the Beatles on tour, as a drummer for Barry and the Remains, one of the supporting acts on their 1966 American tour.

Back at the room, Todd was carefully drying his hair with an electric hair-dryer in front of a mirror. He's a mousy-looking guy, with slightly buck teeth. His hair is worn in a shag, with streaks of tinted red and green falling over his left and right ears, respectively. He is super-thin and was the only one who neither ate nor drank anything throughout the whole trip. He's considerably outspoken and always the showman, making cracks, mimmicking and gesticulating. He is amiable, and seems to appreciate and enjoy a good conversation with someone on his level. I started my questions.

"In Ed McCormack's "Rolling Stone" article on you, you were quoted as saying that you were the best guitarist in America. . ."

"That story was fucked up. I was misquoted constantly throughout it. What I did say (and get this right), was that I think I'm a better guitar player than Leslie West, who is considered to be the best guitarist in the country. Some guy just followed me around for a few days, wrote a story, and sent it in to "Rolling Stone." I didn't even know him. That's why I never pay any attention to the press–it's not worth the hassles."

"Yet you've been getting almost unanimously favorable reviews."

"Yea, it's strange, it does strange things to your head, but I'd just rather ignore it. What magazine are you from?"

" "Poor Richard's," a campus weekly." (No response).

Then one of the members of the band wanted to know if there was any way I could find out the score of the Stanley Cup playoffs. A phone call later, I told him that the Bruins won, 6-5. He looked happy–he won a bet with another of the group. I turned back to Todd.

"I liked the ad for your latest album–you with a stick of dynamite and a lighted match saying: Go ahead, ignore me."

Todd Rundgren

"I thought it up myself. See this T-shirt (he boldly expands his scrawny chest), in the middle I'm going to put that slogan around all these drawings, and on the back there's the name of my new album. I had glitter all over the front, but it all came off when I had it washed."

"The other day I had Something/Anything? (his latest album) on, the cut was "Black Maria." A friend of mine from the corridor walked in and I asked him what he thought. (Todd's ears perked up). He said, as have many critics, that it sounds good, but there's no special sound, it could have been virtually anyone."

"Well, that's why I never read anything about me." Then he turned away.

When his hair was in just the right state of fluff, some herbaceous smoking matter materialized and was passed around the room. The number of indulgers quickly diminished as it was rotated, soon leaving just the star and the reporter. "Do you notice any difference when you play stoned?"

"There is no difference," offered one of the band. "It's just playing stoned or playing straight--that's the only difference."

Talk of Something/Anything?, a double record, led to the fact that it was recorded at the Record Plant, in New York. "I heard that the sound there was pretty bad," I said, "Hendrix's studio, Electric Lady, supposed to be the best."

"Not true," Todd told me. "I like the Record Plant better, that's why I recorded there."

"John and Yoko have been doing a lot of recording and producing at the Record Plant." This drew an outraged response from Todd.

"Shit, man, the four individual Beatles are making the worst music around today. John Lennon is doing nothing for music and he's giving himself a foolish image. McCartney is no better. Ram started out good, but by the end, it fissled out."

"George is still cool, though. I mean you know the guy a bit, don't you think that he's got his head together more than the others?"

"Why? Because he gets dressed up in a white coat and plays Madison Square Garden? George is just as fucked-up as the rest of them. The only reason he wanted me to produce Badfinger was to get off easy and still get his name on the album."

"Do you think that George is making the best music of the four Beatles?"

"Are you kidding? Have you heard Ringo's new single, "Back Off, Bugaloo?" It's the worst record in a year–and George produced it. It's a piece of shit."

"The Band is my favorite group. I couldn't believe what you said about them."

"Well, it's true. They were very unprofessional and acted like novices during all the recording of Stage Fright, which I produced."

"Were you responsible for the thumping bass drum on "Strawberry Wine?"

"I was responsible for every sound coming out the way it did on Stage Fright–I did the pre-mixes, too. That was Richard (Manuel) playing the drums on that cut, he plays harder than Levon (Helm)."

Somehow, the talk moved on to a favorite subject of mine–bootleg records. Todd's temper flaired.

"I've never heard one, and I don't want to hear one. The artist gets cheated and the music gets ruined in the process. There are a lot of things like publishing royalties and performance royalties that get overlooked and some guy ends up making a lot of money."

I tried to offer something in the way of a defense for them, but was quickly overruled. I changed the subject to his music.

"Do you know that "I Saw the Light" has the same riff as "My Sweet Lord?"

"It has the same chord progression as "My Sweet Lord," "He's So Fine" by the Chiffons. . ."

". . .and a thousand others."

"Right. Actually I use the same chord progressions on every song. I just switch keys." (Laughs)

"Do you write songs on piano or guitar?"

"Both. I'm always writing songs. I've already got my next two albums planned out. The one after the next will be with an eighty-piece orchestra."

"Where do you get all your energy? You're always on the go."

"Natural Speed." (Laughs)

"How are your records selling?"

"I don't know. I don't pay any attention to my record sales."

"Well, are you living comfortably?"

"My lifestyle for the last two years has been very unconventional. . .I can't really answer that."

He began putting new strings on his Fender Telecaster, which he had just purchased the day before in a Chicago music store. "I've never played one of these before, it's gonna be strange." He fooled around a bit with the vibrato arm, "I thought these things went out of style with Jimi Hendrix!"

By now the group had their mime make-up on, and were going over the songs to be done. Everyone made sure that they had the order right. Todd started getting dressed for the show–a shiny silver shirt with matching boots, skin-tight green hip-huggers, and a purple jacket.

Leaving the building, there was the usual banter about Southwest. A member of the band felt the concrete walls and remarked to Todd, "Look at this--wood-grain plaster." The elevator came, everyone packed in and it started getting crowded. "How many people does this closet hold anyway?" someone remarked. It was all right out of A Hard Day's Night.

The drive from Southwest to the stadium was unendurable--Todd did the driving. He drove in from Boston, too. He's a reckless driver, taking very wide turns, making very fast stops. He commented on the illogic of the traffic signs and complained about his Hertz Rent-A-Car, "This damn car doesn't go past eighty-five--even when I floor it."

As soon as we arrived to the concert there were hassles. One of the guitarists had no guitar strap, the drummer's drum sticks were somewhere in Logan Airport, he had to use an old beat-up set. It was 6:30 by the time Todd and the group went on, and already beginning to get dark. This pissed them all off.

His act is billed as "The Todd Rundgren Show." Besides Todd performing on piano, guitar and drums, The Hello People, a fine group in their own right, do mime and comedy while Todd waits backstage. I stayed backstage to observe the goings-on. A cute girl, very nervous, approached Todd. "I just want to tell you that I really dig your music (giggles)." "Thank you very much," said Todd, the perfect gentleman. A few minutes later and a guy came up to him, "Hi, do you want some smoke for your head?" He politely declined and the guy went on his way.

I started talking again. "This university has pretty good audiences, so don't worry, it'll be cool. Port cities are better audiences and more responsive than, say, the Midwest. They are usually ahead of everyone else a bit."

He stared at me, "The trouble with you is that you intellectuaiize too much. Audiences are the same everywhere." I retreated.

When Todd went on the equipment was atrocious. He did the best he could, but was disgusted and everyone realized it. At one point he knocked over the top of his piano, with it falling on his guitar, miraculously not breaking it. He did a few songs from Something/Anything?, "It Wouldn't Have Made Any Difference," "Piss Aaron" with mime–it went off well for all around. It wasn't until they broke into "I Saw the Light," Todd's hit single, that the music started cooking. He talked a lot in between numbers, in the usual defiant manner that so easily characterizes him.

The audience was clearly mixed. Some girls were yelling for a boogie, one guy demanded some "music," but by the end there were clearly those who dug it, and those who didn't. Todd is very show-biz on stage–his moves are all planned in advance–his Peter Townshend-type leaps, his heavy rock guitarist stance, his lines between songs. He is enjoying it all, and playing the part to the hilt, all quasi-professional.

But the show was short, too short. He didn't enjoy it and the people could sense it--that was his big mistake. A professional could conceal it when his gig is a drag. It was Todd's first outdoor concert and his first university show. I doubt that Todd would enjoy doing this type of thing again, and, even more important, I doubt that audiences would flock to see this again. You're not quite there yet, Todd, you still have a few things to learn.

The Real Bromberg Shines Right Through

By JIM LAVRAKAS

"Do you like interviews?" I asked Dave Bromberg as he sat in McManus's ice cream parlor and ate half of a grilled cheese. He was exhausted from the last few days on the road and was looking forward to more of the same hard work for the rest of the week.

"I don't like dumb interviews and people who ask me what Bob Dylan is really like," he said emphatically. He sat back and sipped at the vanilla soda with chocolate ice cream that he clutched possessively. I think he was having trouble with the french fries.

Dave Bromberg opened his show at the Amherst Folklore Center with no introduction at all, launching straight away into Livingston Taylor's "Six Days On The Road". Bromberg and the people backing him, he calls them the "Fabulous Torpedos", were really wailing when Dave slowed up a bit to introduce "a friend" who was making a surprise appearance to play with him. His friend was none other than David Amram, musician in residence for a week at UMass. Neither of them knew that each other was going to be in the area until the day Bromberg arrived. Amram is on Bromber's spanking new album. "Whenever we're in the same area, we try to get together," Bromberg said.

"Suffer To Sing The Blues" is on Dave Bromberg's album and was the next song in the set. With Amram tooting on the french horn, as in the album, the song retained its freshness and funkiness.

Asked if he was pleased with his first album, Bromberg said, "I produced the album myself...I really can't compalin." He said that album producing is the hardest thing to do, it drives him crazy, and is, as he put it, "an ulcer making of gig." He produced John Hartford's latest album (about whom he had much praise and admiration) which seemed to be the main source of learning about "ulcer gigs" of that paticular kind.

In listening to Dave Bromberg's stuff, one may tend to think his music has been influenced by the more famous musicians in his life. The "famous people" he has known is an impressive list that includes Bob Dylan, Tom Paxton, Taj Mahal, Tom Rush and Flatt and Scruggs. However, Dave chooses to name people other than these celebraties when talking about influences on his musical growth: Doc Watson, King Solomon Hill, Jerry Jeff Walker are on the top of his list. He has played with Chubby Checkers, by the way, and lays claim to the hottest version of "The Twist" that has ever been heard.

After "Suffer To Sing The Blues", Dave had trouble with his guitars as two of these assorted instruments he had on state each broke a string as he picked them up. It prompted him to say that his guitars were rebelling and when he picked up his dobro, without any negative response, it was obvious that "this instrument wanted to be played." He played a wonderfully soft and subtle folk tune, "Darlin' Cory."

The middle of his show continued to be varied and intense with his selection of songs running anywhere from "old Irish fiddle tunes" to hillbilly shit-kickers. Dave Amram went on a kazoo spree during one of these middle songs that left the audience completely entertained.

It would be hard to decide just what the highlight of his set was. One would certainly have to say that Dave's version of Jerry Walker's "Mr. Bo Jangles" was really the most memorable song of the evening. With Dave Amram's french horn and Dave Bromberg's subdued, saddened voice their version of the song was the most meloncholy "Bo Jangles" ever produced.

In the middle of this song, Dave Bromberg suddenly pulled up to speak; "I think the time that I got the biggest kick out of hearing this song was the time George Burns sang it on the Ed Sullivan Show." One would think this joshful speech would tend to destroy the somber effect Bromberg had so painstakingly built with the song, but this was not the case. He went on to explain the origin of the song and talked about the real Bo Jangles. His habit of interrupting a song with an interjected speech is part of his crazy style to relate to the audience...and it works so well for this "Crazy Jew From Tarrytown." He finished the song with some extraordinary guitar picking and when the song was over, there was a moment of enthralled silence.

Mississippi Fred MacDowell's "Good Mornin' Little Schoolgirl" was another goodie of the evening after which he asked for requests. Shouts of "Sammy's Song!", a hunting song about a teenager's initiation to sex and "fiddle!" prompted the Bromberg wit: "You people are really masochists...'Sammy's Song' and my fiddle!"

A baby started to cry in the audience so Dave and the "Fabulous Torpedos" (Andy Statman on the sax and mandolin, Steven Burgh on bass guitar) played the "Hobo's Lullaby" which succeeded in pacifying the cranky babe–to the approval of all.

Dave and the "Torpedos" (with Dave Amram frantically playing three different reeded instruments, at one point two at the ame time) launched into "Someone Elses Blues" and succeeded in awakening the baby once again, who joined in the "sing the Blues!" Amram's dexterity, versitality, and patient work in this one was really appreciated by the Folklore crowd.

"This last song deserves audience participation. at the end of the song turn to the person next to you and demand his or her money...the other alternative is to scream for help," said Bromberg to introduce the song he and George Harrison wrote last Thanksgiving. The song was a product of "good stuffing". Asked if "The Holdup" was written in this country Bromberg answered, "No, we wrote it in New Jersey." Bromberg's sense of humor stops at nothing.

His encore was almost "Sammy's Song", as that song seemed to be the favorite for everyone that had listened to the album. However, he did not play it, he did a beautiful and whispish song called "A Man Should Never Gamble."

When asked if his music is purely autobiographical specifically in connection with "Sammy's Song" he said that none of his material is "pure anything...it's all fucked up...a combination of a lot of things." For "Sammy's Song" there has to be an emotional build-up in order to sing it. He said he was just not psyched up to sing it, although he did want to please. One would have to agree that the song is hard enough to sing as an encore, and usually an emotional song like this one is a good one for an encore, let alone a regular part of a performance. One time, he said, he came out onto the stage and after a big "HI!" launched into "Sammy's Song" which was probably the most anticlimatic thing he could do to start the show.

He finished his show standing in the midst of the audience, a profound and appreciative silence following to the end of his song. After the show, in the back of the restaurant, as he supped late on a bowl of organic vegetable soup, he talked about his past professional life and his future.

"I enjoy backing people up. It's a lot easier being an accompianist." He said that he did not feel frustrated about not breaking out on his own until now. He made it understood that doing both, backing other musicians up and working on his own, were educational and agreeable. For the future, he intends to have more ulcers, study and do the work he is doing now.

Back at McManus's Dave Bromberg sat in the booth looking like he was going to pass out from exhaustion except that he still had to pay the bill.

"Is Randy Scruggs (the bass guitarist on his album) the son of Earl?" I asked him.

He nodded yes, told me that Randy was still in high school, and that his teachers just did not understand him. "Someday", said Dave, (I could feel the Bromberg sense of humor becoming animated once more) "someday, Randy will regret the fact that he missed all those alegebra classes."

I don't know why I did it, pushing my luck so, but I wanted to really test his sense of humor so late in the evening. I asked him, "By the way, what is Bob Dylan really like?"

The look that came over his face was fearsome. He reached across the table in the middle of McManus's, of all places,grabbed me by my shirt, and said to me in a low voice, "I told you not to ask me that question." I grinned at him attempting to hid my fright and embarrassment.

He suddenly relaxed his grip, relaxed his tense look, sat back, and really sly-like grinned across the table at me. Dave Bromberg had really let his genuine affability and easy-going nature shine right through.

Appendix: In Case Of Trouble

By FRANK JOHNSON

It is obviously quite difficult to prepare a definitive set of cures for all stereo maladies in the space provided in these columns. It is, however, quite simple to list a few suggestions that might prevent needless return visits to dealers or service centers. Recalling last week's column, I refer to interested readers a most valuable "flow sheet" of corrections that may be taken to fix a defective component in Roy Allison's "High Fidelity Systems". This provides a much more comprehensive list of steps than a short summary such as today's ever could.

If there is a set of rules to be observed with regard to stereo systems, the first one should probably go under the heading of "common sense". To reiterate many points I have maintained throughout the series: always keep in mind the capabilities of the equipment you are assembling. Never invite trouble by creating situations that are dangerous. One such suggestion concerns unpacking a new system once it is finally home, out of the store for the first time. Dealers frequently get back merchandise which was damaged through improper unpacking. This sort of damage includes picking up a tuner by the AM antenna so that the antenna breaks off, slashing a speaker carton with a knife so that the wood cabinet is scratched, or picking up a turntable by the tone arm so that the arm is either bent or actually broken off. These are not uncommon maladies, and if a new owner cannot ascribe the blame to himself, he may do the same thing again. Many manufacturers supply unpacking information on the carton, but it is surprising how many owners are too impatient to read even the most simple instructions when the set is in the home. A minute or two of precautions can be perhaps the best invested time you'll ever make for your hi-fi system.

Another "common sense" precaution concerns the ever-popular quest for convenience. Some audiophiles seem to like to mount wall receptacles on the speaker terminals of an amplifier, so as to facilitate speaker connections. I leave little to the imagination as to what may happen. In haste, all the owner has to do is plug the speaker lead into an AC socket, and the result is an instantaneous burnt-out speaker. Because speaker systems are frequently the most costly investment in a stereo system, it goes without saying that they should be protected from such situations. In actual use, there are few stereo amplifiers whose speaker terminals are prohibitively difficult to connect, and this calls into question the very idea of mounting the connections onto an AC line socket. Take a few minutes to make all connections securely, and to phase the speakers. Never invite disaster by trying some foolish "short cuts". I submit instead a method which is almost convenient as a plug and much cheaper. When installing speaker wire, obtain wire with clear plastic insulation that has different-colored leads (silver and gold). With a label maker or other suitable identification, mark "silver" on the appropriate terminals, one at the amp and the other at the speakers, after phasing is correct. Do this for both speakers. As silver corresponds to silver, phasing will always be correct, and installation is quick and easy.

Sometimes a hi-fi dealer will be visited by an angry customer who bought a super-power amplifier a week ago and now is disgruntled because he isn't getting any volume. There are several possibilities for this problem. Many owners run speaker wire under the rug, and conventional speaker or lamp cord creates an ugly bulge. Instead, they use FM twin lead, which is flat and therefore doesn't leave so much of a bulge. This wire is rated at 300 ohms, and when it is used over long distances, a great deal of transmission loss occurs. The average amp-to-speaker distance is about 20', and over this length an amplifier might be driven to distortion while the speaker is robbed of power, simply because the twin lead has too much resistance to the current. As wire diameter decreases, resistance to electrical current increases. Wire thickness is measured by gauges, much like that of a shotgun. The lower the number on wire gauge, the thicker the wire; 8 gauge wire is thicker than 18 gauge wire, etc. For long speaker runs, don't use wire having a gauge thinner than 18 or 20; the dealer will check gauge for you if you request it when buying the wire from him. On short wire lengths, wire thickness becomes rather academic, but there is general agreement that on longer runs thick, heavy wire minimizes transmission loss and cuts resistence. Besides inviting amplifier distortion, transmission loss also can cause the protective devices in the amplifier to cut out or "trip", because it is working so hard. Many transistor amps have thermal circuit breakers which go into action when the amplifier is hot, and this might not occur so readily if the speaker wire is sufficiently thick.

The same problem can arise if only one strand of wire is connected to a terminal, instead of the usual braid. When an amplifier is coupled to a speaker by only one thin strand, it can sometimes reduce efficiency by 95%! To avoid this potential problem, which can result from tension on the speaker cord, twist all bare leads together after stripping off the insulation. Do a careful and thorough job. For the most thorough connection, solder the leads after they have been twisted. Many amplifiers have speaker binding posts with holes in them; the soldered lead can simply be inserted in the hole and the retaining screw tightened. Periodically, check the leads both at the amplifier terminals and at the speaker terminals. If any seem loose or if any seem to hang "by a thread", repair them immediately. Remember that a poor connection will make a speaker "go out" intermittently. If one channel suddenly quits, it may be due to a bad connection. Before you consider sending back an amplifier to be serviced, check to see that all connections to the speaker are tight.

Similar difficulties can arise with the other sources. Many audiophiles like to make their own "patch cords", and save money by soldering on the end plug to the connecting cable. In time, the connection may work loose, causing problems. It is strongly recommended that, if a system must be disconnected frequently or moved, permanently-molded phono jacks be obtained, to avoid the possibility of a loose connection. Phono jacks and plugs, correctly referred to as "RCA jacks", have been called the weakest link in the audio chain by some professionals, and with good reason. Because of their design, they are very easy to work loose under tension and a precise, tight connection is impossible unless it is made with a hot soldering iron.

The most common source of trouble with RCA jacks is between the turntable and the amplifier. Incorrectly seated jacks may cause hum or loss of signal. If this problem arises, lift up the turntable (or changer) base and locate the plugs to make sure they are correctly inserted. Do the same for the amplifier. Next, make sure that the leads from the cartridge are fastened correctly to the female sockets for the jacks; one may have worked loose over a period of time. Check the tension on the leads that go from the sockets up to the tone arm. Then, check the terminals on the phono cartridge itself to make sure they are correctly fastened. (If the cartridge mount comes in the form of a plug, take off the plug). Make sure that the thin, colored wires aren't loose anywhere. If they are, pull off the connectors from the leads on the cartridge (don't leave them on) and re-solder them. Never try to solder the leads when they are attached to the cartridge, because this can damage the cartridge permanently. Afterwards, make sure that the plug fits in securely so as to make a tight connection between the cartridge and tone arm.

This procedure will probably eliminate any hum caused by an improper connection. If it does not, check to see that the cartridge terminals are fastened according to the color code. There is no standardized system for color identification, but consult both the cartridge instruction manual and the turntable instruction manual for the proper sequence. In addition, the correct terminal (right hot, right ground; left hot, left ground) will usually be identified on the cartridge as an abbreviation: "RG, RH, LG, LH".

Periodic turntable maintenance has been discussed in earlier columns, so it will not be repeated here. A point that should be raised is one concerning the power outlet for the turntable or changer. Some amplifiers have a few "convenience" power outlets on the back, permitting a number of sources to be plugged into them. If the outlets turn off with the amp, they are called "switched". If they remain live as long as the amp is plugged into the wall, they are called "unswitched". It is best to connect the turntable line cord to the "unswitched" socket, or a handy wall plug, so that it switches off independently of the amplifier. If the amp is shut off while the turntable or changer is still running, part of the turntable drive mechanism will be engaged. Most changers use a drive pulley arrangement, and the pulley is made out of rubber; if it is left engaged, the rubber will be deformed and a "flat spot" will result, creating noisy running and many drive problems. Always let the changer shut off independently of the amplifier for this reason. Some changers have a "control base", which allows the amplifier to shut off when the changer does. This is OK, providing that a separate mechanical source such as a tape machine is not connected to the amplifier convenience outlet: if so, then similar maladies will result with the tape machine.

With tuners or receivers, similar problems may arise from loose connections to those of speakers. Few FM tuners can do an acceptable job of reception from built-in antennas; they should have as good an antenna as possible; preferably a roof-mounted one if this is feasible. If the antenna leads are loose or shorted out, loss of reception (or noisy reception) results. Always make sure that antenna connections, like all the others, are tight and secure. For improved FM reception, try to mount a roof antenna, or, if one is already in use for the TV set, obtain a "coupler" or "splitter" that will allow another tap from the antenna. Never splice two connections without a coupler (this causes severe phase loss and a resulting loss of signal) and try to obtain the best coupler whenever possible; i.e., one with as little "insertion loss" as possible. This is specified by better coupler manufacturers. Some TV antennas are not designed for good FM reception, and this will be evident by the signal quality after connecting the FM tuner. If another roof-mounted antenna is out of the question, try a tunable "rabbit ears" antenna optimized for FM only. While this indoor antenna may not provide the best sensitivity, it is considerably better than a simple dipole antenna supplied with the tuner, and it may be tuned for the best reception. Most do not cost over about $7, and they are well worth it.

It has been my experience that most hi-fi problems arise from improper connections, and that is why today's column was mostly concerned with those that are likely to result. It is clear that most ailments not arising from improper connections cannot be repaired by the average hi-fi owner. If these procedures have been carried out, and problems still persist, check all owner's manuals pertinent to the problem at hand. Many manuals- in particular those which accompany amplifiers- have a helpful check sheet handy for identifying problems. But never try to repair internal problems in electronic equipment yourself. In practically all cases such "do it yourself" techniques void all warranties, if they are still applicable, and they increase the likelihood of further damage. Obviously, for those special cases where a particular component is at fault, the manufacturer should be notified, and most supply a list of service stations which will repair the unit. Keep the shipping cartons that the components were packed in; they may be needed for shipping to the manufacturer under the warranty. Fill out all registration forms for the warranty when buying the unit, to avoid trouble when servicing the unit. Finally, buy a proven, reputable brand that is not likely to break down in normal use. Your dealer is the best person to consult about such purchases.

Films

"Macbeth" Rendered Boring, Trite, Inept

Macbeth

Adopted for the screen by Kenneth Tynan and Roman Polanski from the play by William Shakespeare; directed by Roman Polanski; starring Jon Finch and Francesca Annis.

By MARY LOU GORDON

Roman Polanski's Macbeth is perhaps one of the worst films to come from Hollywood in recent times, and with the competition being what it is today, a film has to be pretty bad to be considered the worst.

A major deterrant to the film is the lack of dramtic force and drive that stems from Polanski's slanted and narrow interpretation. The film fails to do any creative justice to Shakespeare's superb psychological thriller, and in Polanski's hands it often becomes as boring as it is trite and enept. He has buried the challenge and the suspense, and leaves us with a plot that has the appearance of being no more than a flimsy transluscent shadow when compared with the depth and grandeur of the original play.

The treatment of the film is devoid of any of the sensitivities or deep-rooted emotions that constitute the backbone and mettle of the play, and it stands as a fumbling, awkward charade that is neither a contemporary version of the play nor a straightforward, historical one. It is a shabbily developed, clumsily acted piece of cinematic garbage that flounders miserably somewhere in the middle, concerning itself primarily with the idea of the painful retribution due those who overstep boundaries in the quest for ambition and power.

For all of its theatrical pomp and surface glitter, Macbeth possesses few redeeming qualities. It offers no genuinely acceptable purpose for its being, outside of existing as a medium through which Polanski is able to revel in his sensational exploitations of murder and brutality. It is a Macbeth where the blood runs freely and the gory details are taken from their off-stage hiding places and glamorized to their sickening fullest. The beauty and poetry of Shakespeare's speeches and the psychological aspects of the play are well sacrificed here for Polanski's concern with fast action and shock effects.

Polanski has a special fascination in this film for the close-up, and he seems to gain a special masochistic joy in forcing the audience to sit through monumentally vivid scenes of depraved mutilation and butchery whose repulsive effects can only be compared to those felt from Ken Russell's The Devils.

The script flows as if the text had been chopped by a blind man or an illiterate, and results in a film which often suffers badly from a lack of cohesive, coherent thought. The film is sometimes too vague and ambiguous, failing to provide any background information to the action, laying little or no groundwork for the drama.

Polanski overlooks the various delicate psychological plot lines that are intertwined throughout the play. He limits the scope of the film by concentration soley on Macbeth's lust for power, and in doing this, he sacrifices much of the theme to satisfy his own divertive wanderings. He completely ignores the aspects of revenge and guilt, and greatly undermines Shakespeare's sense of the diabolical in the character of Macbeth.

Much of what is bad comes from the inability actor Jon Finch to play a forceful and convincing Macbeth. A Shakespearian actor he is not, and his main problem is that he is extremely inflexible and uncreative in a role whose psychological complexities deem thes qualities essential. Finch lacks emotion, sensitivity, depth, and an overall understanding of the character. He overplays the minor scenes and underplays the major ones, completely failing in any way to capture the essence of Shakespear's complex character. Finch spends most of his time looking hopelessly forlorn, exuding as much life as a petrified creton, and running through his soliloquize as if he were racing to be at the clock, garbling and slurring many words in the process.

Francesca Annis, as Lady Macbeth, is as stiff and lifeless as Finch, but the reason seems to more from Polanski's dry interpretation of her role than from her lack of talent. She comes alive during her sleepwalking scene, but fails in an overall sense to accurately portray the powerfully evil and demonic woman who controls Macbeth's life and is directly responsible for his downfall and ruin. Early in the film, she seems ready to burst forward with a commanding performance, but always hesitates at the final moment, dropping back into a harmless, rambling lull.

Her performance in the scene where she calls all the evil in the world to come and fill her soul is perhaps the most vacuous scene in the film. She effects this moment with a deadpan look and a nonchalant air that is as disappointing as it is exasperating to watch.

Miss Annis effects a basically stronger character than Finch, but her strength is apparent only in the light of his weaknesses.

The film does have, however, exquisite settings and costuming, but their grandeur is completely out of keeping with the rest of the film. The stark, dire realism of Polanski's gothic Scottish settings and his vision of the decadent Elsinore are visually beautiful interpretations of Shakespeare's intended mood of stealthy treachery, barren futility and gloomy darkness. The forests and moors have an unnatural ethereal quality to them that provides the proper vaporous locale for his clairvoyant world of prophetic magic.

Polanski's characterization of the witches is his best attempt at transposing the characters. They present his biggest chance to bring in aspects of the bizarre and the grotesque, and he utilizes his sense of the macabre to the fullest. He gives his witches a perverse sexuality which becomes a bit repulsive, but nevertheless adds a strange new dimension to Shakespeare's traditional black-cloaked hags.

As the film proceeds, one begins to wonder if Polanski has any concept of his own style, or rather, his lack of it. He often goes overboard with stylization until he reaches a point where his obvious, mechanical contrivances, such as the sloppy enactment of Duncan's murder, becomes so ludicrously fake that they are laughable. The final scene of Macbeth's decapitated head leaves much to be desired in any qualitative view of aesthetics as ridiculous as it is, Polanski cannot even make his ultimate scene of bloody gore look good.

Macbeth is a good example of what can happen when a basically good director oversteps his abilities and attempts to improve on a piece of art whose coherence and solidity refuses to let itself be amended. Polanski isn't the first person to attempt to dissect and correct Shakespeare, but after this fatal bomb, hopefully he will be the last.

somewhat perverse character is diagnosed, a very funny comedy about the roles women play in our society portrayed by three who are quite adept at imitation.

Yellow Submarine (Saturday, Thompson 104, Times available, check ad)

The fact that Erich Segal co-authored this feature-length cartoon fantasy involving the Beatles' adventure in the imaginary Pepperland may wisely steer you clear of this obvious and banal film. The humor is flat, the images fall into bland repetition, the story falls somewhere between monotonous and pretentious with enough "in" references to satiate any Beatle freak's appetite; even the songs are lost to the overpressing insipidness.

And These Standbys....

A Clockwork Orange (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Stanley Kubrick's masterful, chilling, and engrossing look into the fate of free thought in the not too far future. An incredible blend of technical expertise.

Fiddler On The Roof (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Or how not to adapt a fine Broadway musical into a film. A flat, overlong, bloated musical film which makes a wonderful stage experience intolerable.

The French Connection (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

Fast, flashy and manipulative cinema which happens to be the most stylish thriller in quite some time, but hardly the best film of last year. It is a fine film, capturing the grittiness of New York at breathneck speed and benefitting greatly from Gene Hackman's boorish portrayal

The Godfather (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

An extremely respectful adaptation of Mario Puzo's bestseller about the expansion of organized crime in America. It is lengthy, reinterpretation of the lost genre of the gangster film with superlatively stylized and controlled direction by Francis Ford Copolla.

The Last Picture Show (Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Academy of Music, Northampton)

The Best American film of last year is this moving portrait of a young man's coming of age in a desolate Texas town during the early Fifties.

What's Up Doc? (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Barbra Streisand and Ryan O'Neal star in Peter Bogdanovich's attempt at recreating the delicious sophisticated fun of the Thirties comedies. He doesn't quite succeed, but its an argument for cinema purists to quibble over for this happens to be the funniest, most sparkling entertaining ninety minutes in years.

Theater

Canterbury Tales
The UMass Theatre will close out its 1971-72 season with a theatrical event that most theatre goers seldom have the opportunity of participating in, the world premiere of a theatrical production. On May 4-6 and 11-13 8:30 p.m., Bartlett Auditorium, The UMass Theatre will present Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, from a production concept arrived at by Marya Bednerik and Janet Craft.

Six of Chaucer's most popular tales are explored. They are the world famous Wife of Bath's, The Prioress's, The Millers's, The Pardoner's, The Clerk's and The Merchant's.

Working with only six performers enables the ensemble to display a variety of talents in a variety of roles. Each performer singularly and in ensemble is given the opportunity to explore the dramatic possibilities of Chaucer's poetry through dance, movement and voice. The method of working on Canterbury Tales is untraditional in that the performers are led to their themes by improvisational work.

The School For Scandal
The Restoration comedy by Richard Brinsley Sheridan will be presented tonight, tomorrow, and Sunday evening at 8 at the Theater #14, Smith College. ($1).

The Hostage
Brendan Benan's swaggering Irish play, a witty and irreverent account of the Irish Rebellion, will be given three performances this weekend: tonight, tomorrow and Sunday evening at 8:15 at the Lab Theatre, Mt. Holyoke, and three additional performances next weekend ($).

The Zoo Story and Press Cuttings
Two one-act plays, the former Edward Albee's stinging avante-garde dialogue between two men in a park, the latter a more traditional work by George Bernard Shaw. They are schedule for tonight, tomorrow, and Sunday evenings at 8:30 in the Stone Basement Theater, Amherst College.

Music

Chamber and Orchestral Music
Or in its full title: A Vernal Phantasmagoria of Chamber and Orchestral Music as presented by the Amherst College Collegium Musicum. Composers in this diverse program include Poulene, Carter, Debussey, Mozart, and Brahms (Symphony No. 2) and the concert is tonight at 8:15 in the Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College.

Fleetwood Mac et all
It's definite. Fleetwood Mac will be appearing in Alumni Stadium Sunday afternoon with McKendrie Spring and Ashton, Gardener and Dyle. The concert will be free and as you probably already know the publicity has been kept to a minimum. Fleetwood Mac is one of the finest groups to emerge from the shores of Great Britain and should prove to offer an excellent afternoon of music. Their overall sound is one of smoothness and preciseness but also they are capable of becoming integrated with the likes of rock and roll. The concert is tentatively scheduled to begin at 1 P.M. however gates will open at 11:30.

Flight and Cricket Hill
Two area bands, Flight and Cricket Hill, will perform Friday night in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 P.M. Flight, who played in numerous concerts here last year, has been scarce from the UMass campus recently. Cricket Hill, on the other hand, has appeared frequently at the Blue Wall and in the vicinity. The evening will contain everything from "down-home" country tunes to biting rock and roll. ($)

Mass In B Minor
The Mount Holyoke College Glee Club, the Princeton University Glee Club and the Valley Festival Orchestra will join on Sunday to perform the Mass In B Minor by J.S. Bach in a two-part concept, part I beginning at 4:00 p.m. and part II at 7:30 p.m. in Abbey Memorial Chapel.

Bach's Mass In B Minor, believed to have been composed between 1733 and 1736, utilizes the full range of form and technique available to a composer of the time, including both baroque and late-Renaissance styles and structures. There is some question whether it was ever intended to stand as one musical entity; during Bach's lifetime, it was performed only in separate sections. ($)

Matthew and Peter
Playboy has gotten into the music business and are pushing a number of acts. Among these are Matthew and Peter who are from New York City. Matthew plays the guitar and sings. Peter plays the flute and sings. Matthew writes all the songs. Tonight at 8:00, at the Amherst Foklore Center. Free.

Smith-Amherst Orchestra
For their final concert of the season this local ensemble's program melodes Schubert's symphony no. 8, "unfinished"; and Hinemith's "Mathis der Maler," symphonic synthesis; this Tuesday evening 8:15, Greene Hall, Smith College.

UMass Symphony Orchestra
A variety of performing mediums and musical styles will mark the concert program of the UMass Symphony Orchestra Wednesday, May 10, at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The program will be: Francesco Manfredini's "Concerto for Two Trumpets, Strings, Clavicembalo, and Organ," featuring student soloists Robert Amato and Douglas Purcell; Benjamin Britten's "Simple Symphony for String Orchestra; Igor Stravinsky's "Symphonies of Wind Instruments;" and J.S. Bach's "Cantata No. 130–Herr Gott, Dich Loben Alle Wir," featuring the chorus and solo vocalists. Conducting the orchestra will be Ronald Steele, associate professor of music. The concert is open to the public without charge.

The Youngbloods
Friday night at Smith College the Youngbloods with Clean Living will be performing in a concert starting at 7:30. The Youngbloods, Warner Brother's recording artists, have extensively been touring the East and at last will be coming to the area. They are primarily a country-blues group accented with electric piano and a twangy guitar. The performance will be in Greene Hall. ($)

Films

Burn (Thursday, Student Union Ballroom, 8 and 10)
A visually powerful yet plodding film about the toil and unbelievable suffering of blacks on a 19th century Caribbean isle. The plot is both confusing and, at times, ridiculous, in which Marlon Brando portrays an oppressive British official who initiates a slave revolt and then crushes it. An attempt by Italian director Gillo Pontecorvo to revive the swashbuckling epic which isn't wholly successful because of the weakness of the script, but still manages to have a believable look to it.

Catch 22 (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith College, 7:15, 9:30)
Mike Nichols' interpretation of Joseph Heller's hugely successful surreal antiwar memoir makes for a searing film experience. Alan Arkin gives one of last year's best performances as Yossarian, the air force bombadier who discovers he's damned if he does and damned if he doesn't (which is essentially what Catch 22 is.) The film is wild, chaotic, and an episodic look into the absurdity of war and takes place on a dry makeshift B-52 base in the south of Italy during the latter days of the war.

Closely Watched Trains (Thursday, Merrill Science Center, 3:30, 7:30)
An oddly likeable minor work about a young man named Milos and his life at a country railroad station during the Second World War. The ending is a bit downbeat for the rest of the film but Jiri Menzels has pieced together a number of amusing scenes and characters in this otherwise congenial work. The film won an Oscar in 1968 as being the Best Foreign Film of that year.

Cool Breeze (Calvin Theater, Northampton)
Although weak in plot and lame in humor, there is enough action, violence, and wisecracks in this black cops-and-robbers thriller to make for some diverting anti-establishment entertainment. Featuring Judy Pace, Raymond St. Jacques, and Thalmus Rasulala, the film proves as only moderately successful at cashing in on Shaft's success.

Exodus (Sunday, Mahar, 7)
Otto Preminger's lengthy and honest attempt at Leon Uris' novel about the birth of Israel as a modern nation state. The film is competent, slick, and diverting enough in its narrative. Preminger is at his best with his actors who sometimes make this occasionally boring epic tolerable, or at least, interesting. Its large cast includes Paul Newman as Ari, Eva Marie Saint, Sal Mineo, and Jill Haworth.

Candy Darling, one of the three stars of Andy Warhol's latest film Women In Revolt, to be shown four times on campus this weekend.

Get Carter (Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton)
A story of revenge very well portrayed. This British based film concerns a gangster who returns to his home in Newcastle to avenge the murder of his brother. Michael Caine is very effective as the man pursued as director Mike Hodges has quite vividly captured the underworld milieu with the right amounts of sordidity and an intrigue. The film is well-plotted and consistently entertaining, despite the occasional violent moments.

...If (Tuesday, Student Union Ballroom, 7:30 and 9:30)
Lindsay Anderson's shockingly accurate portrayal of British public school life which disturbingly presents the bleak hypocrisy of this regimented lifestyle. The film merges color and black-and-white to accent the gap between the three main characters' two worlds, outside the school and within its walls. It is one of the most interesting films of recent years which manages to jolt the viewer in the beautifully-executed climax. Starring Malcolm McDowell who has now become a cinema idol because of his portrayal of Alex in Clockwork Orange.

The Hot Rock, Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton)
George Segal, Robert Redford, and Zero Mostel play a number of boobish jewel thieves in this generally likeable comedy adventure. The story concerns their attempt to steal a large diamond from the Brooklyn Museum and the complications which occur during their attempt. There is some fine acting, good camera work, but still nothing really exceptional beyond some good fun.

Macbeth (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Beware of Roman Polanski's latest foray into morbidity. For more see review on page twenty-three.

Nicholas and Alexandria (Palace Theater, West Springfield)
A rich, long, respectful, expensive spectacle which may impress you with regal elegance if it doesn't bore you to death first. Franklin Schaffner, who won an Oscar last year for his sweeping direction of Patton comes back in a restrained manner that's as dull as it is controlled. The last of the Czars, Nicholas and Alexandria, live in comfortable ennui far from the storm brewing outside and this is where the film fails.

Repulsion (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)
A fine introduction to the work of Roman Polanski is his second commercial feature. It is a striking, bleak psychological study of the disintegration of a young girl's mind and how her pathological hatred of men causes her to become a murderess. The film benefits greatly from the controlled, pathetic portrayal of the girl by Catherine Deneuve, but mostly from the supple blend of psychological nuance and elements of shock which so distinguish the films of Polanski.

Shaft (Calvin Theater, Northampton)
Gordon Parks' highly successful, slick detective drama about a black private detective who takes on the Mafia. The film has a fine ear for dialogue and Parks has an extraordinary feel for atmosphere and character which somehow makes up for the implausibility of his plot. Actor Richard Roundtree gives Shaft his proper detached coolness and effectively introduces a character who looks to be the newest audience pleaser and director Parks, one of our country's finest photographers, proves he can move an action film with great imagination and ease.

Silent Running (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
An uneven blend of superb science fiction effects and tepid, emotionally vacant drama about the future custodian of Earth who watches over the planet from a floating space vessel and gets into various adventures. The technical effects, supervised by director Douglas Trumbull, are staggering, but the story is hardly worth noticing and is only occasionally interesting.

Tales From The Crypt (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
The first satisfying horror film in four years, or at least since Night Of The Living Dead, is this genuinely frightening, ingenious, and intelligent excursion into the supernatural. It is a set of five horror tales as five tourists trapped in a crypt are given visions of what they would do if released. Quite original and scary with a fine cast led by Ralph Richardson, Nigel Patrick, and Patrick Magee.

The Ten Commandments (Amherst Cinema, Amherst)
Some three hours and forty minutes of pure hokum, Cecil B. DeMille style, which is to say the ultimate "shtick." The story is a classic Hollywood interpretation of the Old Testament tale of Moses and the Jews' exodus from bondage across the Red Sea. It is remembered for the huge sets, the overwhelming numbers, the ridiculous script, some appalling acting from performers who should have known better, and the unusually tame direction of DeMille; but is probably most fondly recalled because of the special effects which include the legendary parting of the Red Sea.

Women In Revolt (Saturday, Sunday, Campus Center Auditorium, 7 and 9)
Candy Darling, Holly Woodlawn, and Jackie Curtis play three harried heroines in the latest film from Andy Warhol's Factory. It is Warhol's look at the Women's Liberation Movement through the utilization of three most unusual personalities, all boys trying their best to be girls. It is very much in the tradition of the pathetic portrayal of the girl by Catherine Deneuve, but mostly from the supple blend of psychological nuance and elements of shock which so distinguish the films of Polanski.

Letters To The Editor

Adelle Ignoring Facts?

To the Editor:
The Adelle Davis address is one example of America's problems. When one does not have to be concerned with the effects of one's actions, it's easy to be entertaining. One can make fascinating statements without regard to their accuracy or impact. The 800 students who listened to "America's No. 1 Nutritionist" (?) were entertained, yet, some, I suspect were worried. At the very least, the billing quoted above lends an aura of respectability, that is not deserved in the opinion of many in the scientific community. It is a sad commentary on our society that those who take such liberties with scientific truth get top billing. The facts probably are less exciting. I will not dwell on the numerous statements that were either wrong, silly or really dangerous since some may be refuted in another letter.

I am concerned about a much bigger problem. Ms. Davis would have us believe that all the problems of civilization would disappear if we merely return to a diet of natural foods. To raise such hopes in impressionable youths is both cruel and irresponsible. It is open season on the food producers and processors and mud throwing is quite fashionable apparently. This may provide a good ego trip but it is no solution. We have 50,000,000 too many people already in the United States to turn the clock back 50 years as Ms. Davis advocates. A national adoption of these policies is an invitation to disaster for this country. Other countries, who unwillingly have this policy, are desperately trying to get away from it. The sacrifices required by the U.S. population to implement Ms. Davis' recommendations would really boggle the mind. Perhaps we should say the sanity!

The U.S. is going to see more, not less, tailor-made, highly processed food, in order to fee our population. Let us be optimistic! Do you rally think that the most technically sophisticated nation on earth does not have the scientists to create foods with optimum nutrition. This can be done and will be done. We cannot leave such an important task to the whims of nature. Sometimes, she plays dirty tricks on us and puts very toxic materials in foods. This fact is well documented in the scientific literature but the "natural food" people choose to ignore it. If the national nutrition situation is as bad as Ms. Davis suggests, which I don't believe, surely the solutions are likely to come from scientific formulations of foods rather than a hit-or-miss selection from a "health store". Does anyone in the audience believe, after listening to the long list of chemicals that Ms. Davis suggests as essential in the diet, that you can go down to the local health store and concoct an adequate diet. It's not that simple!

We need more, not less, applications of sophisticated science to solve some of our nutrition needs. We cannot turn the clock back. Look ahead and be optimistic.

Why Not ROTC?

To the Editor:
Lately there has been all out campaign to remove ROTC from campus which I find very disturbing. Although I personally do not believe in a military structure, I do believe that ROTC should remain on campus as long as there is a military force. I feel this way because of the following reasons.

First, by removing ROTC from a liberal minded atmosphere such as this, you are separating those potential officers from experiencing much free thought that could alter their opinions towards the war.

Secondly, by removing them from this campus they will be forced to attend a more military-orientated institution in which they will be indoctrinated toward a more militaristic outlook.

William J. McCarthy

Who's Best?

To the Editor:
An open letter to the Administration.
The Personnel Committee of the Economics Department has denied reappointment to Professor Michael Best, and I cannot urge the Administration strongly enough to reinstate Professor Best. As an undergraduate at the University of Massachusetts, I have taken courses in Anthropology, Chemistry, Economics, Engineering, English, Mathematics, Microbiology, Philosophy, Physics, Psychology and Zoology. I can say with complete certainty that I have never had a professor who has motivated me as much in his respective subject matter as Professor Best has. I feel that the Personnel Committee of the Economics Department would be doing a great disservice not only to the Economics Department but also to the undergraduate community as a whole by not reappointing Professor Best.

Norman J. Parker, Jr.

We Want Mike

To the Editor:
Between the two of us, we have taken four courses with Professor Michael Best. We are both planning on doing our senior honor thesis under his direction. It seems foolish to us that the Economics Department would be so narrow in its scope so as to terminate their association with Mr. Best. We feel that students should be allowed to participate in his teaching of viewpoints which are in the minority of American mainstream economics and which oppose the rigid status quo of the UMass Economics Department.

We understand that Mr. Best is being fired for failing to publish materials in the journals prescribed by the Economics Department. We contend that their policy reflects a basic difference in the motivation behind the intellectual activities of the department versus those of Mr. Best. The Economics Department is concerned with the formulation of mathematically abstract economic models which, in effect, divorce economics from world political systems. (i.e. see Daily Collegian, May 1 where Rottenberg is reported as criticizing Bowles for practicing politics instead of economics.) The department approaches the study of economics in a deductive, "ivory-tower" manner. THEY IGNORE the role of political power in the allocation of resources. But instead, stress their hypothesis that an efficient micro-economic system would be beneficial irregardless of the allocation of decision-making power. It is at this point that the Economics Department has no room for Michael Best. We feel that Mr. Best is motivated by a true love of the Third World People, many of whom are deprived of the basic economic necessities: food, clean water, clothing, shelter, and proper medical care. Shouldn't this extensive human suffering be the crux of the study of economics! We feel that the knowledge and expertise that Mr. Best brings to these matters through his actual experiences with Latin American economics is invaluable, and that his continuing pursuit of the Third World through study and teaching is a more valuable use of his time and ability than would be publishing esoteric articles.

As interdisciplinaries interested in the relationship of political and economic institutions in the development of the Third World, we are disconcerted by the narrowness. For, if there is one professor who can possibly aid us in our endeavors, it is Michael Best. As students, we demand that Mr. Best remain at the university because of his talents as an educator, and in respect to the personal ties of friendship and the good vibes that this good man has brought to us all.

Editorial Points

If the Administrators who volunteered for the "dump on an Administrator" Heart Fund campaign are so intent on getting wet they should sit outside the Building Administration Office in the Campus Center and get the benefits of the leaky roof.

A lot of people who answered the Collegian survey yesterday weren't pleased with the quality of the Editorial pages. ?

By the way, Ed Brooke is the U.S. Senator for Mass. If you haven't heard of him it's because he only comes back here when he's up for re-election. And then only when someone else will pay his way, (such as the Program Council).

It's unanimous. Every professor who teaches Food Sciences 101 has written a Letter to the Editor condemning Adelle Davis. Could it be that they have a legitimate argument? It certainly looks that way.

Workshop In Munson

To the Editor:
On Friday, May 5 John King the chairman of Citizens for Plan B in Worcester will be holding a workshop in Munson Hall room A on the first floor. The workshop will be about Worcester city government and its alternatives. Come and learn about what the Worcester Telegram & Gazette hides from the citizens of the city. We have to find out about our support on campus, so all interested people are urged to attend and hear Mr. King.

Also on June 4th at Institute Park in Worcester Citizens for Plan B will present a daylong rock concert. Tentatively scheduled to appear are the Boston Blues Band with Babe Pino, DNZ formerly the Joneses, American Standard, and Hot 'n' Nasty. We need people to work on the concert committee; publicity, marshalls, concession stand etc. Help make this show the biggest event to ever happen in Worcester.

So all people who will be stuck in Worcester and Worcester County this summer and would like to accomplish something; people who want to be informed about their noble city; and people who want to work on the concert, come to Munson Hall, Social Action Center, room A at 10 A.M. on Friday. Any questions call Jon at 65246.

Who Stole My Bike?

To the Editor:
I would like to express my deepest disgust to the person or person-if you work as a team-who stole my bicycle either Monday or Tuesday from the laundry room of Van Meter South. My first reaction was disbelief, then anger, then self-pity and finally pity for you. I truly cannot fathom how you could rip-off someone else's property-especially when it is so expensive and gives so much pleasure to the owner. I pity your mind and the way it operates.

Arnie Sampson

P.S. If I see you on that bike around campus...

More On Adelle

To the Editor:
The talk by Adelle Davis on Monday contained much erroneous information. What is sad is that her fame and popularity enables her to draw huge crowds and to unintentionally mislead too many people. And what makes it so dangerous is that part of what she says is true, which provides the part which is not with a false image of scientific reliability.

It is true that advertising claims for many foods are quite frequently unjustified. It is NOT true that food processors are "putting chemicals in food to kill people", or that pasteurization "destroys most of the nutrients in the milk we drink". Commerical pasteurization is less damaging to most nutrients than simple boiling or traditional home-cooking. The advice of drinking raw milk could have disastrous consequences.

It is true that enriched white bread will not "build bodies" or "produce champs", but the implication that it could produce "corpses" is a bad joke.

The notion that all food additives are harmful or that all toxic hazards can be eliminated by restricting our consumption to "natural food", is false. A glance at the book "Toxicants Occurring Naturally in Foods" published by the National Academy of Sciences, would make it immediately obvious that a large number of plants and animals used by man for his food contain, as natural constituents, chemical substances which possess various toxic properties. These substances have always been in man's "natural" food, will always be there, and more of them will be discovered as our methods of analysis imrpove. But it would be grossly misleading to discuss toxicity of food components, natural or added, without any reference to intake levels. The feeding of butterfat (a component of the dairy products so generously recommended by Adelle Davis) was fatal to many animals. But the amounts fed were abnormally high. Essential minerals, vitamins and indispensable amino acids can be toxic if fed in excessive amounts.

It is not true that chemical fertilizers produce nitrosamines in our food causing cancer. The nitrate ion is relatively harmless to humans and under normal conditions it is very rapidly excreted without reduction to nitrite. On the other hand, the possibility that nitrites when used as additives to food may produce nitrosamines some of which may be carcinogenic, is presently under careful investigation.

The statistics given by Ms. Davis on Athereosclerosis are inaccurate, and the major cause of this serious disease is not "lack of vitamins". The overwhelming evidence shows clearly that it is much more complicated than that. Her recommendation that blood cholesterol levels should be 80 mg % is totally unreasonable. The mean level among men in the USA is about 240 mg % and levels below 200 are considered good. The most recent findings on the role of diet in coronary heart disease are summarized in a report published by the American Health Foundation last year. Adelle Davis should study this report.

Ms. Davis should know that butterfat is not required for absorption of calcium, that skim milk can be and usually is fortified with vitamin D and does not contain less protein that whole milk, that instant dried skim milk is not inferior because it is "all puffed up", that processed cheese does not contain added hydrogenated fats, and that vegetable oils which are rich in polyunsaturated fatty acids are also rich in vitamin E.

Ms. Davis should know that not all ills can be cured by off-the-cuff vitamin prescriptions. Adelle Davis means well, but she obviously needs to verify her facts.

Crew vs. NU, BU On The Charles

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Starting just above the Longfellow Bridge and ending at the BU Bridge, tomorrow morning the Crew team will race against unbeaten Northeastern and Boston University in a regatta on the Charles. Three shells are entered, with the freshmen racing at 10:30, followed by the junior varsity at 11 and the varsity at 11:30.

Two weeks have passed since the double defeat by Coast Guard and St. Joseph's, and varsity coach Mike Faherty has switched around personnel and changed the riggings to allow a lengthening of the strokes in an attempt to find a winning combination. Coach Faherty noted "The week off has helped, as it gave us the chance to relax after pressing too hard in the former races." The same game plan of 34 strokes/ minute along with aforementioned changes underlie UMass chances.

Northeastern will be the shell to beat, as they have not been beaten by any college division club, and lost a nail biter to the Union Boat Club, one of the top units in the nation. NU victims include: Yale, Rutgers, MIT, BU, Brown and Columbia. MIT beat the Redmen three weeks ago on the Harlem River. If that is any indication, NU should be tough to beat.

Boston University has not won a race yet this year, but they are expected to present a challenge to the Redmen, as they row a very togh schedule. Coast Guard, which outclassed the rowers two weeks ago by two lengths, only edged BY by one second. BU's JV and Freshmen units expect to present the greatest challenge as they defeated Rutgers and Dartmouth last week. NU also has two very strong JV and Freshmen sheels, with the former being undefeated.

This tune up for the Dad Vails should present the Redmen with some problems, but also could indicate whether the oarsmen will straighten out in time to be a contender for the big one in Philadelphia. This will mark the first time that the Captain, Rick Jones, will row with the varsity eight, as he has been the stroke for both the varsity four and the JV eight in recent weeks.

A Lightweight shell consisting mostly of freshmen has been formed in an attempt to ready boats for all events in the Dad Vails. This shell will be racing in Worcester on Saturday against eight schools, including Coast Guard and Marist.

Derby Tomorrow

(AP)-Riva Ridge, who has tasted defeat only once in the past 10 months, heads a field of 16 in Saturday's 98th running of the Kentucky Derby, one of the most exciting two minutes in the world of sports.

The pride of the Chenery family's Meadow Stable, winner of seven stakes races during the same period, was rated Thursday as the 9-5 favorite to win first prize money from a pot of $182,000, second richest in Derby history.

The Churchill Downs handicapper named Mrs. Maribel Blum's Hold Your Peace as the probable second choice at 3-1 of the more than 100,000 fans who will be on hand for the race.

No Le Hace, J. R. Straus' winner of the Louisiana and Arkansas derbies, was listed as third choice at 5-1 with Paul Mellon's Rokeby Stable racer, Head of the River, next at 6-1.

Head of the River won the Everglades Stakes on April Fool's Day, handing Riva Ridge his first defeat in nearly a year.

Freetex, Joe and William Stavola's on of Vertex who run under the colors of Middleton Stable, was figured to bring 10-1 odds; Introductive was listed as 12-1 and Sensitive Music at 15-1.

YanCon Title At Stake For Stickers At UNH

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

The Yankee Conference Title is at stake tomorrow when the UMass Lacrosse Team travels up north to face the Wildcats of New Hampshire.

Though the Redmen Stickers crushed UNH last year 12-3, this time they won't find the going so easy. The Wildcats boast a much improved team, a blend of experienced upperclassmen and strong freshmen. Their record to date stands four wins to Norwich 20-3, Middlebury 7-6, MIT 13-6, and Tufts 13-4 and one loss-to UConn 6-4.

A unique sort of competition will take place in this game; "son playing against father". Coach Garber's son Teddy plays attack for the Wildcats. Though just a frosh, he has been a high scorer for the team all season.

The Wildcats use 2 sets of attackers, one composed of upperclassmen and the other consisting of 3 freshmen, Teddy Garber, Gary Fincke, and Mike Fish.

A Redman victory is a must Saturday for the Yankee Conference Title. Also, if the Gorillas win their last three games they can be well assured of a qualifying place in the USILA (United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association) post tournament games.

WMUA

Saturday afternoon the UMass Baseball team travels to Durham, New Hampshire to face the Wildcats of UNH in a key Yankee Conference game. It's a must win for the Redmen and WMUA will be there to bring you all the action.

Kent Best and Steve Gershmann will be calling the shots starting at 12:50 P.M.

That's Redmen baseball, on WMUA, 91.1 FM "The voice of the Redmen" at 12:50.

And on Sunday night on Sport Talk, also on WMUA, Best and Marty Kelley will host Track Coach Ken O'Brien and some of his trackmen. That starts at 10:30 P.M.

A big weekend of sports on WMUA.

Finley-Blue

OAKLAND (AP)-"Charlie Finley has soured my stomach for baseball," says Vida Blue, the Oakland Athletics' pitcher who ended his celebrated contract holdout earlier this week.

"He treated me like a damn colored boy," the 22-year-old, black left-handed added in an interview aboard an airplane that brought the A's home from Boston to start a homestand Friday night.

Blue made the statements in an interview with Ron Bergman, baseball writer for the Oakland Tribune.

"I'm not happy but I signed," Blue said, and added that he almost didn't board the flight from Boston. A's owner Finley accompanied the team on the flight.

"If I go out there to pitch the first time and don't give 100 per cent, because my attitude has changed, that might be the last game I pitch."

Yan Con Title Up For Grabs

UMass Hosts Tourney Tomorrow

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

April 22, 1972 -- The UMass tennis team defeated URI 6-3. April 25, 1972 -- The UConn tennis team defeated UMass 5-4. April 26, 1972 -- The URI tennis team defeated UConn 6-3. Confusing no?? Well that just about sums up the outlook for the Yankee Conference Tennis Championships which are scheduled to begin this morning at 9:30 a.m., right here at UMass on the Boyden tennis courts.

As far as clear favorites go, there are none. Coach Kosakowski did a little speculating and came up with, "I think that URI has got to be the favorite especially since the insertion of that new top man Steve Gorman." Gorman did not face the Redmen two weeks ago, and with his insertion the entire Rhody lineup is moved down, giving them added strength at each position.

Yet looking at it from the standpoint of either URI or UConn, they both most likely see the other two as the teams they must beat.

Giving the overall rundown on 7 teams Kosakowski had this to say; "I have to give the edge to URI and UMass with UConn and UVM just a step behind. New Hampshire might well play the spoiler role, while Holy Cross and Maine both lack depth.

Basically the Conference Championships run like this: For each position (number one singles, number two singles, ... number one doubles etc.) each school will enter a team. Thus for number one singles, for example, there will be 7 entries. These 7 men will compete in a bracket of eight to decide the top number one singles man. This procedure will follow for the remaining five singles positions, as well as the three doubles. For each victory along the way, the team is awarded one point. Its as simple as that.

Last year the Redmen edged out URI for a 19-18 victory, thus it will be the Rams looking for revenge. Four of the last five years the title has gone to UMass, with URI interrupting the string in 1970 for their sole Yan-Con title.

When asked about the upcoming championships, Coach Kosakowski circumvented the issue of the tourney and turned towards the weather. "What I want to know is when the hell is it going to stop raining. At least I hope they stock the tennis court with trout." Apparently Kosakowski has had his fill of rained out matches, and with good reason.

The UMass lineup will run like this: On top is Donahue, who holds a 2-3 conference record at first singles. Gary Ney, the second of four freshmen to be Ferber at number four with a 4-1 conference mark. Mark Brass and Robert Schpeiser, at five and six respectively both hold perfect 5-0 records.

Doubles wise, the Redmen do not appear in quite the fine fashion as in singles. Their first doubles combinations have gone winless, while Braley and Ferber at second doubles (2-1) have had a bit more success. Today's third doubles team will be a relatively new one; that of Mike Phillips and Schpeiser.

As far as seasonal records go Vermont is on top at 8-1, with their only loss of the season coming to UMass. That UMass loss was their first competition outdoors, thus UVM might surprise more than a few coaches, and a few players.

The strength though will lie with UMass, URI and UConn, as evidenced by the seedings meeting last night. URI was the big winner as they amassed four first seeds and two second seeds among the nine brackets.

"Picking a winner," mused Coach Kosakowski, "could be as tough as picking a winner in the Kentucky Derby.

For most of the UMass tennis team, TODAY IS THE DAY, for the Conferences are the season. It sure would be nice to squeak out another one.

Daily Collegian SPORTS

FRESHMAN TED DONAHUE will be competing against the top man from each of the Yankee Conference schools tomorrow as he view for the "top man" title in the conference. Playing against the opponents' best, he has compiled a 2-3 record.

Rangers Down Bruins 5-2

Brad Park and Rod Gilbert each scored twice and goaltender Ed Giacomin turned in an acrobatic performance to lead the New York Rangers to a 5-2 win over the Boston Bruins last night in a Stanley Cup final game.

The Rangers, down two games to none going into the game, never trailed as they brought the series to a 2-1 situation.

They led 3-1 after one period and 5-2 after the second stanza as Park and Gilbert hit for two each with Peter Stemkowski scoring an insurance goal late in the second period.

The third period saw the Bruins testing Giacomin time and time again as injuries to defensemen Jim Neilson and Ab Demarco reduced the Rangers to just three backliners. The B's poured in but could not beat the graying Giacomin.

New York came up with three power play goals as the Bruins had difficulty containing the fired up Rangers when the home team had the man advantage.

Boston, on the other hand, had several power play opportunities but couldn't score thanks to the goaltending of Giacomin and some outstanding defensive work by Rod Seiling.

Big Match For Tracksters Vs. Arch Rival UConn

By EARLE BARROLL

UMass vs. UConn.

It's as simple as that and as big as that as far as Yankee Conference track is concerned.

Tomorrow these two arch rivals will meet head on at the Llewlyn Derby track beginning at 1 p.m. UNH will also be on hand, but depth-wise the Wildcats will not be able to compete with either team.

The Huskies are undefeated outdoors, were undefeated indoors and will be looking to avenge their dual meet loss to the Redmen a year ago on the very same track.

The Redmen are currently on a four meet win skein having rebounded from opening losses to Northeastern and Boston College, the latter of which Coach Ken O'Brien still looks back at with much dismay.

UConn has one of the outstanding all-around track atheletes in the east in decatheloner Ron Evans who finished second in this 10-event competition at the Penn Relays last Saturday. He's good for at least four or five events tomorrow.

With the Yankee Conference championships next weekend at Rhode Island this clash between the top two powers does cast an important shadow over tomorrow's performances.

It may also result in several track records.

As O'Brien said, "With good weather I wouldn't be surprised if eight to ten track records are broken tomorrow."

Hitters Play Crucial Two vs. UNH

By BILL BALLOU

"Crucial" tends to be an overused word. It seems like from about the second week of a season onward, every game is "crucial" to someone.

This is one time when that word is appropriate. This Friday and Saturday will see the UMass baseball team face two crucial games, both against the University of New Hampshire.

Why are they crucial? Baseball Coach Dick Berquist knows why.

"There is no tomorrow for us. We're in a situation now where we simply can't afford to lose another game and still stay alive."

The Redmen are still alive in their bid for the Yankee Conference baseball championship and a possible trip to Omaha but are in a tough position. They're two full losses down to Connecticut, and have two games left with UConn. If they win those two games and beat New Hampshire twice this weekend, then they'll be tied with the Huskies as co-champs. But just one loss along the way, be it to UNH or UConn, and it's wait till next year.

New Hampshire is a good baseball team, beating them twice is not going to be easy. Especially if the Redmen play like they did against Maine last weekend. Their defense gave away a couple of runs here and there and presto! a two-game sweep by Maine.

Berquist is hoping it won't happen again and seems to think it won't. "I'm concerned about it all right, and I don't have any answer. But I do think we have basically a good defense. This hasn't been an overall collapse, just a case of the wrong thing happening at the wrong time. Eddie McMahon, I think, is probably more ready for this weekend than he was for last weekend. That error was just one of those unfortunate things that happen, and Eddie's too good a ballplayer to let it bother him."

This afternoon's game, here at Earl Lorden field, promises to be the Yankee Conference's answer to last year's Vida Blue - Sonny Siebert duel. It boasts the two pitchers with the two best ERA's in the YanCon, Tom White of UMass and New Hampshire's Paul Cormier.

White has had a phenomenal season to date and has proven himself to be practically untouchable in the confines of Lorden Field. Cormier is the ace of the UNH staff and boasts an impressive 0.77 Earned Run Average.

The prospect of good baseball weather and these two pitchers indicates that today's game could be the best of the season.

Tomorrow in Durham, N.H., the two teams battle again and pitching-wise it looks like it'll be a battle of lefties. Pete Dresser is slated to start for the Wildcats and Mike Flanagan will probably go for UMass.

Berquist plans to stick with Ron Beaurivage at first base, as the freshman continues to hit well while Dan Esposito continues to struggle. Beaurivage, who started the season in centerfield has been replaced out there by another freshman, Peter Backstrom, who has played very well since his callup from the JV's a couple of weeks ago.

The situation is simple for the Redmen; win all the rest or pack it in for the season. The first of "all the rest" is this afternoon at Earl Lorden Field and promises to be a pip. Game time is 3:30.

RIGHTHANDER CHIP BAYE, sophomore from nearby Northampton, has been a little inconsistent this year but has a bright looking future on the UMass pitching staff.

VOLUME XCIX, ISSUE 141 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS MONDAY, MAY 8, 1972

15,000 People Make It To Free Concert

By KENNETH SULIN

Yesterday was Spring Concert day in the stadium and despite the at times threatening weather, approximately 15,000 spectators made it to the occasion.

The audience started drifting in at 11:30, however some diehards could be found waiting near the gates as early as 7:30 A.M. Though the weather shed a few sprinkles during the afternoon's beginning, all soon cleared and as one person said, it was one of the most successful and enjoyable concerts UMass has ever hosted.

The bill hosted Fleetwood Mac, Ashton, Gardener, Dyke and Company and McKendree Spring nevertheless a few complications did arise, nothing that would be considered a major problem but large enough to create minor tensions here and there.

At first, the regular stage set-up proceedings were to be used, however, a portable stage, The Alfred Glickman Music Shell, was brought in for convenience. Things seemed to be going quite smoothly at this point until the question arose "Is Fleetwood Mac going to make it?" As it turned out Fleetwood Mac had played in Nashville on the previous evening, had to catch a flight to Hartford and finally be driven to Amherst.

Meanwhile back at UMass, the Concert Committee learned that Ashton, Gardner and Dyke would arrive along with Mac at about the same time, 2 P.M. which only left McKendree Spring, who fortunately had been here well ahead of time and therefore agreed to perform first.

The concert itself got under way at 1:20, although the entire crowd had not yet arrived. McKendree seemed a crowd-pleaser with their violin and reverberation acts, insistingly the crowd cheered after their act and were able to get a bit more with an encore. After much delay, dope smoking in the dressing rooms, dope smoking in the audience, etc., Ashton, Gardner and Dyke were brought on at about 3 P.M.

By now the weather had cleared considerably and with the sun peeking in and out of the clouds, the crowd was fully saturated within the stadium's walls. Close to ten thousand sat in the bleachers while the remaining five thousand covered the field area.

Fleetwood Mac made it to Amherst just before 2:00 P.M. and nestled themselves in the Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge. They were escorted to the stadium and were ready to go on by 4:00; however, a final pair of problems arose, one large, one small. The small problem was that Mick Fleetwood had to set up his own drums since his equipment man was more or less stranded in Washington. The larger problem lay with the group's contract which incidently was not actually signed until an hour before the show. Fleetwood Mac had signed earlier in the week but they were late which resulted in a breach of contract. Negotiations began and the signing of a second paper finally cleared up all questions.

They made it to the stage by 4:20, giving the jubilant audience a show to remember, with every kind of music from blues to rock and roll. Probably the crowd's favorite was Fleetwood himself displaying an array of saliva-ridden expressions along with his taut drumming and expert showmanship.

The spectators remained fairly content and behaved well except for one buffoon who hopped the stage fence and pranced around until he was forwardly escorted from the building.

The concert seemed a success. Lee Trousdale and his stage crew did an excellent job in every aspect; in fact even the field was cleared of little in almost no time. According to Elliot Sherman, of the Concert Committee, this was simply a trial concert, a stepping stone that would forecast the possibilities of any performance coming in the future.

ROTC Issue Tops Trustee's Agenda

(Editors note: The following is a statement from Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery concerning the upcoming meeting of the Board of Trustees. This article was originally scheduled to appear on Friday, but didn't.)

The next regular meeting of the Board of Trustees will be held at 1:00 p.m., May 10, 1972, at the Amherst campus. The exact campus location will be broadly advertised as soon as possible. The agenda of that meeting will be as follows:

1. ROTC Programs at Amherst*
2. On-Campus Recruitment*
3. Government-sponsored research*
4. Tuition
5. Items from Faculty and Educational Policy Committee
6. Items from Student Activities Committee
7. Items from Buildings and Grounds Committee
8. Items from Finance Committee
9. Personnel Actions, UM/W
10. Other business
11. Petitions and Communications

In light of the fact that the first three issues (marked with single asterisks) were discussed at length at the April 26 special session of the Board, two general procedures will be followed.

First, oral presentations before the Board will be heard from the Chancellors and from the campus Senates or from their officially-designated representatives. With the exception of the time allocated to the Chancellors, the Boston and Amherst campuses will each have a total of thirty minutes to address all three issues. The allocation of time to each issue and each spokesman and the representatives recognized will be determined by the University Senate at Boston and jointly by the Faculty and Student Senates at Amherst.

——A detailed list of the agenda items coming from these Committees will be released to the campus media very shortly.

Second, position statements and recommendations from any other faculty member or student or organization may be sent to the Board of Trustees in written form. If they are received at least twenty-four hours in advance of the scheduled meeting, they will be distributed to the members of the Board for consideration. They should be sent to the office of the Secretary of the University, Whitmore Building, Amherst campus.

Faculty, students, and staff members should remember that while the meetings of the Board of Trustees are open to the public by law, they are not in any sense public hearings. Thus, on regular agenda items, the Board does not usually formally entertain comment from members of the audience.

The final agenda item, Petitions and Communications, provides the opportunity to bring to the Board's attention issues of pressing concern not already under consideration by the Board or its committees. Of course, given the exceedingly long agenda at the May 10 meeting, the time available for the Petitions and Communications section may have to be more limited than at other Trustee meetings in the past.

ROTC Wins On Petition

By ROBERT TOUAKE

Friday, May 5, marked the end of the petition-sponsored by the Student Government Association in cooperation with the Center for Social Change and ROTC, regarding whether ROTC should remain on campus.

Unofficial results released Sunday, roughly set the figures at 4100 people in favor of ROTC on campus with 3400 against.

Previously the Student Government Association, after consultation with various student groups, decided that the best means to determine student opinion on ROTC would be by means of pro and con petitions distributed by supporters and opponents of the program.

There are a number of persons opposed to the current ROTC program on campus. Both the Student Senate and Faculty Senate recently stated opposition to academic credit currently granted the ROTC program.

Dr. Robert Gage, while not in favor of abolishing ROTC from campus, does believe the best solution would probably be to have some kind of program off-campus. He cited the Marine ROTC program as an example ROTC programs could follow. The Marines hold their program off-campus during the summer.

Larry Ladd, President Student Government Association, is firmly opposed to granting academic credit to the ROTC program but explained he is "committed to support the decision of the student body on the question of ROTC." Personally Ladd believes "ROTC is a government controlled indoctrination program that is not subject to the usual academic criteria and believes that "if we are to create a university based on free and independent thinking and learning we should not allow ROTC to received credit. For it is not consistent with those ideals."

Among the proponents of continued ROTC presence on campus are Walter Edmonds and Michael Quirk, respective Cadet Commanders of the Air Force and Army ROTC programs. They feel that the University system as an integral part of American society should probide a portion of military personnel. Further more the liberalizing effect which results from the diverse exposure of experiences gained on a university campus is essential in the molding of a liberalized officer.

Commanders Edmonds and Quirk believe that an off-campus officer training program would result in increased tax dollar expenditures which would be carried by the taxpayers.

In addition they feel that there is a larger issue of academic freedom involved in the ROTC dispute. ROTC courses are visible and open to all University students for enrollment. Furthermore it would be detrimental to allow pressure groups to censor the choice of courses offered to students.

May 11 the results of the petition will be presented to the Board of Trustees. According to Dave Booker, chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, the results cannot be taken as conclusive. Booker explained that the petition was meant for undergraduate students only and some graduate student names along with faculty names appeared on the petition.

Larry Ladd, president of the Student Government Association, said "the petitions were only intended to gauge undergraduate opinion."

He explained that "because of the mixing of undergraduates, graduate students, faculty, and staff, it is impossible to count the number of students who signed, without many clerical hours that the Student Senate cannot afford to pay for." Ladd said the results of the petition are inconclusive and it is fair to say campus opinion is very mixed and not clearly in any one direction.

55 Arrested At Westover Sat.

Police arrested 55 more anti-war demonstrators Saturday for blocking the entrance to Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee. That raised the total to 393 booked to date on civil disobedience for 11 unauthorized demonstrations since April 21.

Those arrested Saturday were mainly students from Western Massachusetts colleges. All were released on personal recognizance for arraignment Tuesday in District Court on charges of disorderly conduct, disturbance of the peace and preventing persons from entering their place of employment, police said.

About 150 protesters began activities outside the James Street gate shortly after 10:30 am. Following the arrests the remaining demonstrators milled around the island and roadway for a short time, police said.

Both police and protesters expected a larger turnout. There were nearly 40 police on duty.

Friday noon, a similar demonstration resulted in the arrest of 31 students from colleges in Connecticut, who came in car pools from Yale University, Wesleyan University, the University of Hartford and the University of Connecticut.

In a Friday afternoon court session, Judge James J. Landers continued the cases of 22 defendants to June 4 and accepted nolo pleas from nine. Their 10-day sentences on disorderly conduct and disturbance of the peace and a $10 fine on the obstruction charge were suspended for one year.

Mayor Edward J. Ziemba said Saturday that a Friday meeting here with Sen. Edward W. Brooke confirmed a report there are no federal funds available to reimburse the city's costs for police overtime resulting from the demonstrations.

Police and court costs thus far run over $15,000, Mayor Ziemba estimated.

Sen. Brooke, a supporter of withdrawal from the war, said he had felt the demonstrators "have made their point."

"I call upon them to conduct their demonstrations in a manner that is not burdensome to the city," he said.

Radical Ed. Project Forming

For anyone interested in a wholistic and operational project in radical education innovation, a Community-Based Education Committee has been formed of doctoral and Masters candidates at the School of Education.

Its intention is to design and implement an educational model in a small New England town which will attempt to break down the following assumptions which the present educational system functions on:

--that work and play are and should be separate processes.
--that school is for learning and after-school is for working and playing.
--that working and playing are and should be separate from learning.
--that learning is "for kids" and that graduation should attest to the fact that a person has "finished" learning.
--that education is apolitical.
--that education means information transfer from a "teacher" to a "student".
--that a "curriculum" is necessary and can prepare one for "life".
--that all lists should or can be exhaustive.
--that competition is man's normal tendency and schools should press for competitiveness.

They are presently involved in the following activities:

--writing proposals for funding.
--forming relationships and contacts with the people in the target community.
--studying the political, economic and social structure of the target community.
--identifying the most valuable personnel and physical resources in the community which can be enlisted for the project.
--determining the felt needs of the people in the community so that the project can be designed to their needs and with their direction.
--researching into ongoing allied projects to determine their successes and/or failures and reasons for such.

The project is still in its early stages and the Committee is in need of any and all skills or information you may wish to offer.

For further information, contact Annette Townlev: 253-3020 or Dave Magnani: 546-4200.

Brooke Says Viet Nam Is Most Important

Senator Edward W. Brooke spoke here Friday. He disclosed his policies on the important issues of 1972 to an audience of 350 people at the Campus Center Auditorium. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton)

By MARK VOGLER

Senator Edward W. Brooke disclosed his policies on the important issues of 1972 before 350 people at the Campus Center Auditorium Friday morning, putting his greatest emphasis on America's involvement in Vietnam.

The Massachusetts Republican advocated immediate withdrawal of all land, air, and naval forces from Southeast Asia and expressed discontent for the way President Nixon and his Administration are handling the war situation at the present time.

"I feel there is no more important issue in the lives of Americans today than the crisis we have in Southeast Asia," the senator said. "I feel more today than ever before that we've made a mistake in Vietnam and ought to get out right away."

Brooke said that the President had only two courses of action to take to resolve the problem of Vietnam.

"The first move, and the one which I'm in favor of," stated the senator, "would be a complete withdrawal of all our forces. The other alternative, which I hope doesn't come about, would be to bring in more aircraft and more armed forces to stave off further movement by the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong.

Before delving into his short extemporaneous talk on Vietnam, Sen. Brooke informed the crowd that he was well aware of the negative remarks that were directed at him in Friday's edition of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

What Brooke referred to was the comment made in Editorial Points: "By the way, Ed Brooke is the senator for Mass. If you haven't heard of him before it's because he only comes back here when he's up for re-election. And then only when someone else will pay his way (such as the Program Council)."

"I just want to clear up this one matter," Brooke declared. "I'm not paid to come, and I don't come when I'm just a candidate. I come when I'm invited. I came to speak at your commencement last year. I just want responsible journalism and I want you to have the facts on that."

In the question and answer period which followed the Senator's statement on Vietnam, issues from busing to abortion were discussed in great detail.

Asked whether he would support Nixon for the presidency, Brooke said he would because "in my own good conscience, there is too much on the positive side for the sake of this country."

"He has shown some flexibility with regard to Vietnam, he has turned the war around, and he has brought some men home. Yet, even so, I strongly disagree with him on his Vietnamization plan.

"I applauded the president's trip to China. Nixon does have rapport with the conservative elements in this country. I applauded his settlement of the Middle East dispute. And I also applaud what he's done in economics by putting in a wage-price control at a time when it was unpopular."

Another important issue that was aired in discussion was Poloroid's and other American corporations' controversial existence as exploiters of the Blacks in South Africa.

Brooke said that he wished that America didn't have a penny invested in South Africa, but as long as we are there, it would be important to begin movements whereby Blacks are granted equal job opportunities, equal pay and equal promotions.

According to the Senator, Poloroid was typical of this and other corporations were beginning to follow it.

A man in the audience who said he was from South Africa, rose from his chair, disagreeing with Brooke. "That's just not true, just check the stature book," he demanded.

Fifteen minutes prior to the Senator's appearance, representatives of the Poloroid Revolution Worker's Union attached posters inscribed: "No Bull Shit, Boycott Poloroid" to the speaker's platform. Moments later, a male student rushed up from the crowd and ripped down the posters. When the PRWU members requested that he return them, he left the auditorium.

One of the representatives informed the Collegian that the boycott was based on the grounds that Poloroid is a maker of the pass book for South African Blacks, and that any White can ask any Black for this pass book.

Brooke capped the discussion period with a final message on America in Southeast Asia.

"This is going to go down in history as one of the real shames of history. I just pray to God that we're going to end it real soon."

SUG Board To Discuss Issues Of Wage Scales, Advertising

By DON BISHOP

As part of their budgetary considerations for next year, the Student Union Governing Board will this week be dealing with the pros and cons of advertising for the Campus Center Hotel and giving student employees the same pay as non-student employees in the Campus Center.

The question of advertising for the Hotel relates back to a "management services agreement" made between the Board of Trustees and the State Building Authority before the Campus Center was constructed. This agreement stated that for tax purposes and other reasons, the Hotel would not be allowed to advertise for its services through the media.

The argument for allowing advertisement, being presented by various SUG Board members, is that this would increase the revenues of the Hotel to the point where it will become self-sufficient. Any deficit incurred by the Hotel, which is the situation at present, draws on the student generated funds of the Campus Center tax.

SUG Board Chairperson Barry Cohen, feels that this "management services agreement" has been unjustly legislated by two parties for another third party.

Cohen stated yesterday that if the advertising restriction cannot be removed, SUG Board Services Committee will recommend to Finance Committee that the Board not fund the Hotel at all next year.

Cohen and Vice-Chairperson Lisa Mandell revealed the following financial predictions made by the Hotel's manager Donald Witkoski. Operating with the advertising restriction, Witkoski predicts that the Hotel will have a 45% occupancy figure. Without the restriction, the prediction is for a 58% occupancy figure, reflecting an anticipated 3,400 extra room sales.

While the restriction removal would give the Hotel a net profit, it is predicted that the Hotel will run at a deficit again for next year, due to the loss incurred in the area of space utilizations.

Cohen and Mandell feel that this loss could be caught up with by "73-74" through the net profit gain brought about by advertising.

They feel that although the management of the Hotel is supporting this move, the Board will face a considerable fight with the Trustees and the administration. In their budget considerations for next week, SUG Board will also be considering the question of giving student employees the same hourly wage as non-student employees of the Campus Center.

This would be a precedent setting move by the SUG Board in relation to all other student employees on campus. In discussions, both union and management have expressed initial approval for this move.

The Administration, however, has come out against this idea. Vice Chancellor Campion, at last week's SUG Board meeting, stated he was against the idea of equal pay for students for a number of reasons, including the belief that the wage increase would in effect decrease the number of student jobs.

A number of SUG Board members feel that this wage increase is a necessary thing and Chairperson Cohen stated that the budget proposal to be dealt with this week will reflect the pay equalizing concept for student employees of the Student Union - complex.

The $56,000 necessary to raise the wages of all student employees to those of non-student employees, Cohen feels will not effect the Campus Center tax, because the Board will be cutting back their budget in other areas.

Rogers Recalled For Conference

THURMONT, Md. (AP)-President Nixon summoned Secretary of State William P. Rogers home from Europe Sunday and called a National Security Council meeting for Monday-a pair of indications that a major decision on Vietnam is rapidly approaching.

The White House made the disclosures while Nixon worked and relaxed in the seclusion of his Camp David retreat near here.

Deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren said the chief executive asked the secretary, who was in Bonn for meetings with West German officials as part of a series of talks with European allies, "to come back for a National Security Council meeting today and for other consultations."

Warren provided no information on what prompted Nixon's moves.

But it was clear the President was at the point of decision on future U.S. diplomatic steps and on ways to cope with the continuing North Vietnamese offensive which threatens Hue. Before Rogers left Bonn an aide said the talks "will include the situation in Southeast Asia."

The security Council, whose staff is headed by presidential adviser Henry Kissinger, includes the secretaries of State and Defense, the vice president, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The group meets infrequently and its sessions sometimes coincide with major policy decisions by the President.

Warren said the exact time for the NSC meeting had not been set.

He said it is anticipated that Rogers will return to Europe after the White House consultations and resume his schedule.

Rogers was recalled from Bonn even before he had talked with West German Chancellor Willy Brandt. The return forced indefinite postponement of planned visits to Paris and Rome. And it coincided with word that Kissinger's planned trip to Japan had bee postponed until after the Moscow summit meeting May 22-29. He was to have gone to Tokyo May 11.

The two developments pointed toward possible major moves on the diplomatic scene, perhaps centering on the again-suspended public Paris peace talks.

Search For Miners Continues

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP) - Rescue workers neared completion Sunday of a painstaking five-day effort to reach 47 men missing almost a mile down in the Sunshine silver mine.

The missing men have not been heard from since last Tuesday when a flash fire swept the mine, the nation's largest silver operation. Thirty-five other miners were killed and 108 escaped.

The families of the missing miners awaited word at the mine's main opening as workers completed the complex step-by-step measures required to ensure the safety of both the rescuers and any of the 47 men who might have survived the fire's deadly smoke and carbon monoxide.

Other tasks-cooling of the electrical substation to power to rescue hoists, preparation of the slim bullet-shaped rescue device called a torpedo, which could lower rescue workers through a ventilation shaft-were completed Saturday night and Sunday.

But as workers neared the goal they had sought most of the week, officials refused to say how long it might take to reach the area where the missing men were believed to be. General Manager Marvin C. Chase said while teams prepared parallel rescue routes a mile from each other. "We can't afford to jeopardize anything now."

Chase, head of rescue forces drawn from three states and British Columbia, plus the U.S. Bureau of Mines, expressed hope of finding men still alive.

"There's air and water down there and people can fast for a long time," Chase said of chances of survival at the 4,800-foot level.

Chase's optimism was not shared by all members of this small mountain community or those working at the Sunshine compound.

"There's really not much hope," said one miner who was acting as a security guard at the area set aside for the miners' families. He was one of 108 men who escaped from the shafts last week.

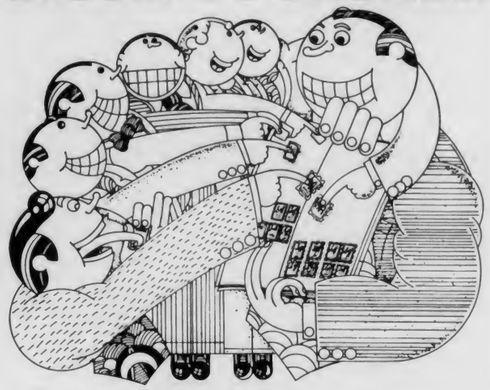
Senate Leaders Return From China Meeting

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate's two leaders, Republican Hugh Scott and Democrat Mike Mansfield, returned Sunday night from their three-week trip to mainland China, saying they found their visit meaningful and encouraging.

Scott told reporters and the 150 well-wishers who greeted the arrival at Andrews AFB in suburban Maryland that the discussions were "a meaningful and honest exchange."

Mansfield said "I was encouraged by what I heard" in the eight hours of meetings the two Americans had with Chinese Premier Chou En-Lai.

Neither senator would discuss details of their trip, first by American congressional leaders since the Communist takeover in 1949, until they report to President Nixon.



They said they would meet with the chief executive late Monday or sometime Tuesday.

In addition to meetings with Chou, Mansfield and Scott said they also conferred for a total of five hours with other high officials and visited six cities on the mainland, including Peking and Shanghai.

The Republican leader said in the talks it was obvious there were differences of opinion but he said these were discussed openly and honestly.

Wallace Passes Humphrey In Delegates

(AP) Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, whose victory in the North Carolina Democratic primary moved him into second place in national delegate strength, takes on Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey in West Virginia's presidential primary Tuesday.

Sen. George S. McGovern, who has the largest number of national convention delegates, hopes to win in his native Midwest Tuesday in the Nebraska primary: -

Wallace passed Humphrey in delegate strength after he defeated former North Carolina Gov. Terry Sanford Saturday in Sanford's state. It was the Alabama governor's second primary victory in three days.

Wallace bumped Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine from the No. 3 spot in delegate strength with Thursday's lopsided victory in the Tennessee primary, where there were 11 candidates on the ballot but only Wallace and Rep. Shirley Chisholm of New York campaigned seriously.

Saturday's victory in North Carolina gave Wallace 37 more delegates for a total of 210 national convention votes committed to him. However, there was some doubt he could hold all of the 49 Tennessee delegates who are supposed to support him at the convention.

McGovern has 267-1/2 delegates; Humphrey, 197. Neither was on the ballot in North Carolina. Muskie, who has quit the primary campaigns but says he is still a candidate, has 128-1/2. No other candidate has more than 15.

With 99 per cent of the vote counted, Wallace polled 406,811 votes of 51 per cent in North Carolina, 59 Sanford's 229,373 or 37 per cent. Mrs. Chisholm, whose campaign focused on predominantly black college campuses, had 59,685 or 8 per cent.

Muskie got 30,190 votes or 4 per cent, and Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, who also has dropped out of primary campaigning, had 9,615 or 1 per cent.

Only candidates who get at least 15 per cent of the vote were allotted delegates.

Sanford, a Southern liberal, who had hoped to go to Miami Beach as a likely compromise choice in case of a deadlock among the top contenders, won 27 delegate votes. He has entered only one other primary, New Jersey's June 6 contest.

President Nixon swept the North Carolina primary, picking up 32 GOP delegates.

In Texas, where there is no presidential primary and delegates will be selected at a state convention next month, two reform candidates were sent into a runoff for the Democratic nomination for governor after Saturday's primary.

Dolph Briscoe, a Uvalde rancher and banker, will face State Rep. Frances Farenthold of Corpus Christi June 3.

Incumbent Gov. Preston Smith received less than 10 per cent of the vote in his renomination campaign, hurt by a Texas stock and loan scandal which had led to a bribery conviction of the Texas House speaker. Smith netted $62,500 in a stock and loan deal before he vetoed two bills which the Securities and Exchange Commission later contended were the key to the scandal.

Humphrey is a heavy favorite against Wallace in West Virginia, where the two are alone on the ballot. In Nebraska, McGovern and Humphrey are the top contenders, but Humprhey conceded in an Omaha news conference last Friday he was waging "an uphill fight."

Both the West Virginia and Nebraska primaries are solely popularity contests. Delegates are chosen separately, 35 in West Virginia and 24 in Nebraska.

Humphrey has been endorsed by the AFL-CIO in both states.

The former vice president carried West Virginia as a presidential candidate in the 1968 general election. Wallace, running as a third-party candidate, got less than 10 per cent.

In Nebraska, the 11 candidates on the Democratic presidential ballot include several who have abandoned active campaigning in primaries or dropped out of the race altogether.

McGovern, Humphrey and Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles spent part of the weekend campaigning in the state. Others on the ballot are Wallace, Muskie, Mrs. Chisholm, Jackson, Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana, Rep. Wilbur Mills of Arkansas, former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy and Mayor John Lindsay of New York.

On the Republican ballot, President Nixon is opposed by Rep. Paul N. McCloskey of California, who has withdrawn, and Rep. John M. Ashbrook of Ohio. Republicans will select 16 national convention delegates.

British Rhodesia Plan Unacceptable To People

LONDON (AP) — A British commission has reported that Britain's projected constitutional settlement with rebellious Rhodesia is definitely unacceptable to the people of that central African country as a whole.

The development reported by informed sources Sunday night, confronts the government of Prime Minister Edward Heath with a critical choice.

This centers on the crucial question of whether it should now abandon the plan and go on boycotting the regime of Prime Minister Ian Smith-or whether it should attempt to railroad the plan through despite resistance by Rhodesia's blacks.

The report of the British commission, headed by High Court Judge Lord Pearce, was handed to Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home on Thursday.

Its contents, pending publication in a few weeks, remain officially secret.

But informant who have seen the report said the conclusions address this message to Heath's government: The majority of Rhodesians, meaning the blacks who outnumber whites by four million to 250,000, have given an unqualified "no" to a deal envisaging slow political advancement toward black rule.

The sources declined to reveal further details of the findings.

The Smith regime proclaimed independence from Britain in 1965 without London's permission.

Since then, the all-white Salisbury government has made Rhodesia a republic and has moved closer to neighboring South Africa's system of racial apartheid or segregation.

The complicated terms of the constitutional plan were explained by British officials to Rhodesia's blacks. They provided for a very slow increase of political representation by the largely voteless blacks. They also provided for a charter of rights for all Rhodesians. They were designed to outlaw racial discrimination.

Brandt Pushes For Treaty

BONN, Germany (AP) On the 27th anniversary of Germany's surrender in World War II, the division of Germany which was brought about remained a key issue in last-minute efforts to save Chancellor Willy Brandt's imperiled Eastern treaties.

On May 7, 1945, the war in Europe that left millions dead came to an end with Germany's surrender in Reims, France.

Germany was divided into Western and Soviet occupation zones, and a final peace treaty never has been signed.

Now Brandt, chancellor of West Germany, faces the political battle of his life to win parliamentary ratification of his treaties with the East. They recognize the postwar borders and the loss of one-third of the territory of the old German reich.

Brandt has only one day before the treaties debate opens to work out a compromise with a powerful parliamentary oppostion objecting to the treaties on the ground that they could mean Germany will never be united again.

Trying in last-minute talks to meet these objections, negotiators for Brandt and the opposition met Sunday to try to hammer out a compromise declaration that would convince treaty opponents the question of German unity is still open.

With the treaties ride the hopes for getting an early start to easing the East-West tensions that began after the surrender and led to the cold war.

In another concession to his hard-driving challengers, Brandt reversed himself this weekend and permitted them to examine previously secret minutes of his negotiations with the Russians which led to the initialing of one of the treaties.

The other treaty is with the Poles.

Brandt was in close touch with Moscow this weekend, seeing if the Russians would approve a West German joint government opposition declaration that the treaties do not permanently block chances for German reunification.

Brandt's hopes for getting the treaties approved received a slight boost Sunday when he and Rainer Barzel, the opposition leader, agreed to resume talks Monday. At the same time Werner Marx, head of the opposition's foreign policy working group, said in a radio interview he and government negotiators have reached "partial agreement" on their one remaining stumbling block-a statement on the right of all Germans, East and West, to determine their own future.

Wood Sees 'Land Use' To Control Population

A "strategy based on land," whereby incentives for, or policies controlling land uses are put into effect to influence population and job flows, may be a major answer to solving the complex urban problems, according to Dr. Robert C. Wood, president of the University of Massachusetts and a former HUD official.

Dr. Wood, in his recently published book, "The Necessary Majority; Middle America and the Urban Crisis," (Columbia University Press), noting that thus far all grandiose measures to save the cities and build on a metropolitan level have failed, suggests as a new starter:

—Subsidies for industries who would be willing to relocate in new communities because the incentives would make it as profitable to do so if the business located in a private industrial park. Wood refers to this as the carrot approach.

—Regulatory measures to control spiraling urban land prices which precludes a wide range of housing choices in older parts of a metropolitan area, which he refers to as the stick approach.

Of the latter, noted Wood, who served as under-secretary and later secretary of the US Department of Housing and Urban Development under President Johnson, "regulatory intervention that controls land values is probably the most important single factor in altering the marginal development of settled urban regions."

Wood acknowledges that the proposals are not new, but he argues that the change in land taxing policy can be impressive.

"Fundamentally," he noted, "we are at a point where public ownership and public planning are probably the essential components for a genuine land reform program.

"Certain levels of density no longer make tolerable private ownership and development even though zoning and planning requirements are available to affect them indirectly."

Wood concluded his book with these two recommendations after a long essay lamenting this country's inability to cope with its problems in the last 20 years. Of this inability, Wood notes:

"It is as if this country is doomed to aspire to one impossible dream after another, without ever taking seriously the effort to make the dreams attainable."

The national move from solving the urban crisis to concentrating on environmental crises is seen by him as "environmental escapism" which "appears one way in which we submerge our present reponsibilities and obligations."

In his chapter dealing with strategies based on land, Wood noted that today population and job flows were the key forces of influence in effecting new communities and bettering older areas.

"Subsidies in the development of new communities should be provided, sufficient to offset the economic advantage to private enterpreneurs in existing metropolitan areas, on the grounds of eliminating some painful urban public external diseconomies," Wood wrote.

He argues that government intervention of plant location through incentives do not have to be confined to new communities, that old, middle-sized cities, "once flourishing, now economically depressed, could be recipients of subsidies on the grounds that their social diseconomies are not large - or indeed approach equilibrium with private economies."

"With this kind of support Savannah, Utica, Scranton, Fall River, all could rise again. Replacing the less attractive inducements of cheap labor and local tax rebates that bring marginal industries into small towns or declining regions would be incentives for first rate industries to help build first-rate towns."

Wood admits ending a book with two recommendations only "may seem anti-climatic," but "detailed proposals along these lines would deeply shake the status quo and provoke considerable urban political debate."

He doesn't suggest, Wood said, that these measures displace the beginnings that were made in the 60's.

"The efforts at institutional change, decentralization to the ghetto neighborhood and the development of a two-tier metropolitan political system should go forward," he wrote.

Wood noted that the key phrase of the mid-60's was the "war on poverty," but that 5 years later, these programs begun with such enthusiasm and confidence are now "increasingly wistful."

What happened in the interim 5 years?

He cites as partial factors, mismanagement, miscalculation and misunderstanding, a presidential campaign, the "Hardhat" and white backlash to increased aid programs, ecology and consumerism and the single largest factor, Vietnam, which sent the cities "on a long cold slide towards collective vulnerability and despair."

Brooke To File Anti-War Bill

Sen. Edward W. Brooke said Saturday in North Adams that he will file an amendment to the Churchill-Case Bill calling for the withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Vietnam by Aug. 31 of this year.

Brooke spoke to approximately 50 persons at North Adams State College, Alumni Weekend.

Brooke said there were approximately 65,000 American soldiers still in Vietnam and the withdrawal of all troops by the end of August "certainly could be done if the North Vietnamese would in turn return to freedom American prisoners of war."

Brooke said he would file his legislation Monday.

Brooke told the gathering that he supported President Nixon, noting that the chief executive's overall program merited his being returned to the presidency for another three-year term.

He cited Nixon for his trip to China and his efforts to achieve peace in Southeast Asia.

"The ignorance the Chinese people had of Americans appears to be breaking down," Brooke said. "Because of the President's trip, we now have great hope of living in a world with natural respect and some understanding in communications."

He also complimented Nixon for his program of wage and price control and for the devaluation of the dollar.

On school segregation, Brooke said, "busing of school children is not the solution to the problem."

Brooke's visit at the local college was arranged by Michael Barry, a member of the class of 1973, and a senator in the college's Student Government Association.

Mt. Holyoke Fast Nets $1,500

3,000 lunches were sacrificed by Mount Holyoke students last week so that the money which would have ordinarily paid for the meals could instead be sent to a children's hospital in Saigon.

The Committee for Fast at Mount Holyoke organized the action with administrators of the school commissary. They agreed to allot the Committee 50 cents for each sacrificed lunch. In all, the total amount of money made from the Holyoke fast should be about $1,500. The number of students participating increased daily, from 580 on Monday to 950 by Friday.

Each day of the fast during lunch hour, the Committee organized faculty-led discussions for students to attend as an alternative to eating. The Committee for Fast also arranged several presentations of a film about the medical center to which the money will be given.

Those who saw the movie learned that their money will be contributed to The Center for Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery, which is a part of South Vietnam's largest civilian hospital. The Center serves two purposes. First, it treats children suffering from burns, injuries and malnutrition caused directly or indirectly by the war. The Center is also important for training South Vietnamese doctors.

Funds from the U.S. Agency for International Development, a major source of income for the Center, have been cut in half this year. Thus, the Center is relying more heavily than ever on donations from private sources—such as the students who fasted at Mount Holyoke College.

UMass Debate Team Successful

By JUDY BENNETT

UMass debaters were successful at both the Marymount Manhattan tournament, in N.Y.C. and the New England Forensic Conference, held at the University of Maine.

At Marymount, an all women's school, Karin Kramer and CC. Hooper showed their debate skills. In preliminary competition they defeated Pace, Alfred, Southern Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Lenoir Rhyne, losing only to John Carroll University. This qualified them for the semi-final round against the University of South Carolina. After debating U of South Carolina, they beat John Carroll University. They were given the top female award and the First Place Team award.

Other people participating were Gerry Hayes, and Paul Lamarche; novices Dianne Pitcher and Jill Peltin; and Nick Saakvitne and David Langer.

At the New England Forensic Conference, the team participated both in tournament debating as well as individual speaking events. In tournament competition novices David Langer and Nick Saakvitne qualified for the semi-final round against Bowdoin. They were defeated by Bowdoin, and for this they received the third place team award. It was the first intercollegiate competition for both novices, who did surprisingly well.

Participating in individual events were Rosemary Connors, Denny Keyes, Dianne Pitcher, Joel Kassimir, and Ed Pepyne.

Rosemary Connors entered the extemporaneous speaking competition, made it into, and won the final round, thus receiving the first place trophy.

UN May Intervene In Ireland

BELFAST (AP)-British authorities are seriously considering the possibility of United Nations intervention if Northern Ireland slides further toward civil war.

This intervention, a well-placed source said Sunday, could come about if militants among the province's million Protestants go on the offensive, as they threaten to do.

And it would come at the request not of the British but of Ireland's prime minister, Jack Lynch.

In the past, Britain has rejected any U.N. involvement in Northern Ireland on the ground that the troubles here are a domestic matter. A clear inference now exists that this veto policy may change.

As the British see it, they took a gamble in March this year when they deposed the Protestant-dominated provincial government and assumed direct rule. They see little evidence so far that the gamble will succeed.

Now, with the provincial parliament suspended, the race is on to find a new political formula designed to persuade Roman Catholics and Protestants that they are getting a fair deal and so wean the Catholic minority away from support for the gunmen before the Protestant community takes the law into its own hands.

No one yet has a clear idea of what this formula may be. The race to find it is not yet lost but it is far from won.

Discontent in the Protestant community and fears of a sellout to a Catholic-dominated united Ireland are at such a pitch that the British believe one major IRA outrage could set off an eruption by the Protestants.

Public University

The public service University has gotten a lot of press in the past two semesters. Wood's future of the University report was its kick-off and was followed up by timely reminders from Chancellors Bromery and Broderick and anyone else who felt he or she had something pertinent to say.

The University Year for Action followed up stressing the need, showing the way the "public" university could become a reality.

Another proposal is now rising to the service, proposing an Experiential Learning Center (ELC).

Briefly, the Center would be a clearing house for all off-campus programs designed to bring the student out to the general community to use his knowledge for the community's benefit,and to learn, through experience, in the real world.

While the proposal written up has some holes in it (where the $74,000 expected would come from and who would screen the programs), it is something which deserves further consideration.

While the proposal should be debated University-wide before any action on it is taken, it is at least a concrete step toward creating a viable program for involving the University in the community around it.

Political Considerations

As the presidential primaries continue, many strange, but not altogether unbelievable stories come about.

One wild one is that George Wallace is actually working for and with President Nixon and Senator Kennedy. How, you might ask?

Figuring that if Nixon is re-elected this year, Kennedy would have an easy shot at the Presidency in 1976. Therefore, Kennedy is working for the re-election of Nixon. Such is done by placing financial support behind a prime Democratic contender, George McGovern.

McGovern, Kennedy might figure, has no chance against Nixon. Nixon is acceptable to many people (one of whom is Senator Ed Brooke of Massachusetts). McGovern, on the other hand, may come across as too radical for many voters and Democratic delegates. Developments in the primaries show Hubert Humphrey to be the only other workable alternative. Therefore, Nixon and Kennedy are working together for the nomination of McGovern.

Wallace is being used to support conservative ideas, which are also held by the Nixon administration. (Nixon and his henchmen just won't say them.) As Wallace picks up more strength with each primary, he is becoming more of a vote swayer. He will not allow the nomination of a Democratic candidate on the first ballot. McGovern will win it on the second.

Nixon will easily win the Republican nomination. During the campaign between Nixon and McGovern, Wallace will throw his support behind Nixon. With John Connally of Texas and George Wallace of Alabama behind him, Nixon figures he will have the entire Southern vote wrapped up. This is his Southern Strategy '72. (You remember how it was back in '68.)

Kennedy will not say anything about the election after McGovern is nominated. Therefore, Nixon will be given a clear field. Kennedy can't say anything for Nixon because it could do one of two things or both: 1) Hurt Nixon's credibility, 2) Get the Democrats angry at Kennedy. Thus, Nixon is elected in November, takes over in January.

Rewards for good service: Wallace is appointed Attorney General (or FBI Director) early in '73; Kennedy wins the presidency easily in 1976; McGovern is made Secretary of State, Kissinger is retained by Kennedy (making McGovern nothing); and Shirley Chisholm is made Secretary of the Interior.

Senator Brooke, following party lines, said here Friday that he will back President Nixon in 1972. This statement came right after he denounced Nixon's war policies and saying that it is time to bring all our military might home from Vietnam. This shocked some; to others, it seemed the typical thing for a politician to do.

On matters more directly related to the University, Brooke said that no campus should be penalized by discontinuance of research funds for the ending of ROTC and the permanent suspension of military recruitment. However, a slight misunderstanding of the situation was apparent as he thought them one in the same issue.

Concerning the student vote, he said the problem is that most new voters have been registering as Independent. He invited them to join the Republican party.

Contrary to what was reported in the Collegian Editorial Points, Brooke comes here more often than for when he is up for re-election. He said this was his fifth visit. He also made reassurances that he would be back to campaign here before the election was over. During a news conference, he also stated that he was planning to campaign strongly no matter who his Democratic opposition was.

He also stated during conversation with students that he will disclose full his campaign contributions. He said he was doing that even back when he had little or no support.

Smile, Darn You, Smile

WASHINGTON -- No one talks about it, but there are definite medical hazards involved in running for the Presidency of the United States. One that is increasingly a problem has to do with a candidate's face.

Anyone who has been following the Democratic primaries on television knows that every presidential hopeful always has a smile on his face. What people don't know is that these smiles are frozen there and the longer the primaries go on, the less chance the candidates have of wiping them away.

A plastic surgeon named Cooke told me, "Most of the candidates running for the Presidency have been smiling steadily for five months. By the time they get to Miami they will have smiled for eight months. The muscles controlling these smiles have hardened them into place. I fear that by the time Election Day comes we could wind up with a President with a permanent stupid grin on his face."

"I don't know," I said. "Everybody likes to see a happy President."

"It's all right to have a happy President," Cooke said. "But what happens when he attends the funeral of another head of state?

"Suppose he has to go on television and tell the people the cost of living has gone up 25%, and unemployment has reached a new high. He'd look pretty silly doing that with a smile."

"I never thought of that!"

"What happens when he meets with the Russians to discuss disarmament and is grinning all the time? Do you think they could take him seriously?"

"They might think he's nuts," I said hopefully, "and out of fear give in on something."

"It's too big a gamble to take. I can't believe anyone would have confidence in a President who is smiling all the time," Cooke said.

"Wait a minute," I said. "We've had presidential candidates in the past who smiled continuously, but their faces went back to normal after the election."

"That was before television," Cooke said. "TV has forced the candidates to maintain permanent grins. We saw what happened to Muskie in New Hampshire when he stopped smiling and sobbed. People thought he was shaken up. All he was trying to do was relax his smile muscles for a few minutes. But because of what happened to Muskie, no candidate dares stop smiling now. It would be political suicide."

"Isn't there some way plastic surgeons could do away with the frozen grin after the election is over?"

"It's very difficult. It requires uncreasing the mouth as well as reshaping the face muscles. We've tried cheek transplants but everyone comes out looking like former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell."

Cooke said, "I am not only concerned about the man who is elected President, but I am also worried about the losers.

"What will people think of a man who ran for the highest office of this land, lost in a bitter fight and is shown smiling helplessly into the '70s and '80s?"

"A lot of his financial backers would be pretty sore," I said.

"We must accept the fact that a politician's smile is a physical affliction," Cooke said, "and I hope that after the primaries, when he is shown with his frozen grin, people will not have a bad taste to laugh at him."

Cops 'n Perverts?

To the Editor:

Following is a conversation picked up from a police band radio which was accidentally left on during a daily trip of two Chicopee police officers to Westover.

"Hey Joe, time to call the school bus company again."

"How many this time, Archie?"

"One should be enough. We can cram all the subversive sons o' bitches into one."

"You know them pink perverts've ruined our daily coffee break for three weeks so far?"

"Bustin' ass is better than coffee any day."

"In a way. But I'd rather not 've been the one to arrest my niece."

"Your niece? What'd you arrest her for?"

"Because I'm not prejudiced. One peace hippy pervert's the same as any. Imagine - them sitting' there disturbin' the peace."

"What about the ex-rotsy officer?"

"Him too. What'd you think they threw him out for?"

"I dunno. I'm just tired of makin' trips to that base every day to bus them students to jail."

"Some of my best friends are bus drivers - but maybe we should let the Air Force solve its own problems."

"How?"

"Let them bomb the subversive bastards offa the base."

"Good idea. Will they have to give a two minute warning like we do?"

"Don't be foolish. Never do in Viet Nam. Besides, them sons o' bitches been keepin' first rate American citizens from their rightful employment."

"Oh, I see - if the Air Force bombs 'em, them perverts won't be able to make 'em lose their jobs - they'll be givin' 'em jobs instead. Look at us. Even we get a more stable job!"

"Yeah, but we ain't gettin' extra pay for roundin' up them pink sons o' bitches."

"So we ain't...."

"Nope. Just losin' our coffee break."

"I'd rather kick ass - them busses get here yet?"

"The guy told me he sent the bus already. He even started hirin' new bus drivers on two year contracts."

"Don't you ever get tired of missing your coffee break? That's the only benefit Chicopee can afford to give us an' we still can't have it for another two years, maybe."

"Wanna become a bus driver?"

"What if they start bombing the perverts like I said?"

"That would be the end of the bus company until they build another school. And if we can't even afford coffee breaks, how are we gonna build a school?"

"Won't even have teachers - they're all gettin' arrested too."

"So I guess that kills that job. Oh, well. I guess we better stay police officers."

"Here we are, Joe."

"Willya lookit them sons o'bitches! You know, Agnew once said that the time has come to crush the mouth that bites the hand that feeds it. I never understood it until now."

"He said that? Jesus, he otta be the President..."

Get Off Your Duff

To the Editor:

This letter is addressed to those hundreds of healthy able-bodies, local residents who accept public assistance. I do not begrudge my share of the tax dollar to help the really needy family, the large family, or the family in which the sole supporter has been disabled.

It infuriates me to see young people in their twenties who live through the gracious aid of Welfare at some of the nicer apartment complexes in Amherst. Many of you are grad students - an indication of how easy it is to get on the Welfare rolls. Some sell dope on the side or have under the table jobs and end up with more spending money than I have.

I am not making assumptions. I refer to people I know. I'm sick of working all day so that you can collect your check and spend your time getting loaded at the local bar. You complain to me about the lousy condition of the world, well I say to you that society has never been improved by people who live off the hard work of others. I, for one, am tired of paying tax money to support you. Get off your asses and give something back to society for a change.

Demonstrate

To the Editor:

On the fourth day of the demonstrations at Westover Air Force Base I committed an act of civil disobedience. I sat down at the main entrance to the base with 6 other persons for peace. As a result of this action I was arrested.

I sat down at Westover because several of the B-52's bombing Vietnam now have come from the Westover Base.

I sat down because the Southeast Asian War has NOT ended, as we were secretly promised and as is generally assumed.

I sat down because the senseless slaughter of men, women and children mercilessly continues.

I sat down because the United States continues to drop its napalm bombs, their fiery jelly sticking to its victim's flesh, wasting away arms and legs and hands and faces and people -- people like us.

I sat down because the United States continues to drop its anti-personnel bombs, scattering thousands of invisible plastic pellets throughout their victim's body -- never to be removed.

I sat down because the war is NOT ending, it is escalating.

I sat down because I am revolted by my country's actions.

I sat down because I am conscientiously opposed to war.

I urge you to join with me and the many, many other persons demonstrating for peace in this our third week at Westover.

Come as a supporter if you cannot commit yourself to being arrested.

Come to our workshops if you plan to do civil disobedience.

Join us in speaking out against the violence of the war in Southeast Asia. Join us in calling for its immediate end.

Join us in peace.

Call me at 546-5210 if I can be of any help.

Any Reply?

To the Editor:

Does the Economics Dept. have a reply to the claims made against it regarding the rejection for reappointment of Michael Best? Are these factors involved of which we are unaware? Or do we conclude that the Economics Dept. is indeed an "Economics factory"? Allow us the option of an alternate point-of-view.

Total Amazement, Again

To the Editor:

Total amazement! This is the only way that I can describe Professor Clydesdale's remarks in the May 4th issue of the Collegian concerning Adelle Davis's lecture.

Professor Clydesdale is very correct in quoting statistics on infant mortality; this area is generally considered one of the most sensitive indicators of a nation's overall health. However, the indiscriminate lumping of 72 years of admittedly great advance (due largely to changes in obstetrics and pediatrics, not nutrition) is very misleading. Examination of the more recent figures shows that in 1950 the United States had the fifth lowest infant mortality rate in the world; in 1968 the position was thirteenth and dropping.

The fact that rickets and other diseases have passed from the scene hardly represents laurels to lie on. Need cancer and heart disease even be mentioned? These are increasing at such a rate that only the exaggerations seem to be true. This is not because we are living longer and experiencing diseases of previously unreachable ages; 1967 vital statistics show only creeping increases in the life expectancy for the previous decade. Dr. Jean Mayer points out that 20-year-old men in 36 nations may expect to live longer than the average American men of the same age. Twenty-year-old women in 21 nations may expect longer lives than American women. The battle over the nutritional implications of these and other findings has only begun. We may all be dying from Prof. Clydesdale's "nutritional falacies".

Professor Clydesdale's disdain for Adelle Davis's lack of scientific reference indicates to me that he has not even given her books a scant perusal. Therein he will find ample references to Nutrition Reviews, American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, Physiological Review, and many others.

Adelle Davis's criticism of the food processing industry cannot be lightly dismissed. Others (see The Chemical Feast, Ralph Nader's study report on the Food and Drug Admin.) have come to similar conclusions starting from very different viewpoints; the food industry may be approaching a national scandal. Even the ultra-conservative FDA has been prodded to action on several fronts. At present, 14 nations that import significant quantities of meat refuse to accept beef from the U.S. The reason; the additives used in raising and processing the beef, particularly sodium nitrate, sodium nitrate, and the hormone stilbestrol.

Just to set the record straight, the human need in nutrition for vitamin E has definitely been established, although no minimum daily requirement has been set as of yet. Simply reading the label on a jar of supplements containing the vitamin would have told Professor Clydesdale this.

My point is not that Adelle Davis, or anyone else for that matter, has even half of the answers. There has been too little research done toward sound nutritional theory and certainly not anywhere near enough to justify the absurdly reactionary and close-minded attitudes that Professor Clydesdale espouses. This is not his first tirade against Adelle Davis to appear in this paper. His arguments have varied from transparent deception to the border of blatant misrepresentation. His irrational personal feud with Ms. Davis can only serve to besmirch his otherwise impressive credentials and reputation.

Be An Owl

To the Editor:

It is noteworthy that the Nobel Peace Prize usually goes vacant. Ralph Bunche and Martin Luther King were both awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. Only two politicians have ever been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, Theodore Roosevelt and Willie Brandt, but mostly there is no one selected for this prize because leadership for peace is so rare. War leaders are multitudinous, peace leaders as rare as hens' teeth. Year after year no one is selected for this prize.

Today our socalled peace leaders are not peace leaders at all. But instead they give aid and comfort to the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong gunmen. Under the pretense of standing for peace, our American doves actually form a North Vietnamese division busy killing South Vietnamese men, women, and children. True peacemaking would show itself in an attitude of disapproval, not only of American bombing, but also of North Vietnamese military invasion of the South. He who would truly stand for peace would write a letter not only to President Nixon to stop killing, but even more so to the North Vietnamese because it is the North Vietnamese who are attacking the South. If the North Vietnamese withdrew to their own borders, all killing would stop immediately and peace would reign in Southeast Asia.

The doves are as bad as the hawks in fueling the war and in keeping the slaughter going. Provide grown-up leadership for peace and demonstrate against war-making not only in New York streets but also before every North Vietnamese embassy and every Soviet embassy. (Since the Soviets supply 85 per cent of the military equipment to the North Vietnamese) the North Vietnamese and Soviet powers should be flooded with letters and petitions and telegrams and telephone calls calling on them to stop attacking and stand up for peace. Were some American politician to dedicate his energies to leading such peace action, he would surely deserve the Nobel Peace Prize.

But peacemaking is a matter of individual personal responsibility. It is your duty and mine to stand up for peace. We are today writing both to Mr. Nixon and to Hanoi, asking them to stop attacking and each retire to his own borders. Follow our example. U.S. doves, just as much as hawks, are murderers. Don't be a hawk or a dove, be an OWL. O-Only W-With L-Love!

Apology For Protest Asked

AUGUSTA (AP) — A resolution has been adopted by Maine Young Republicans asking Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis to apologize to Vice President Sprio T. Agnew for an antiwar demonstration during Agnew's recent visit to Maine.

Delegates to the organization's annual convention pa..sed the resolution Saturday.

It claims the Democratic governor "condoned" the actions of about 350 protesters who held the demonstration outside Augusta State Armory April 28 while Agnew was inside the building addressing 3,500 delegates to the Republican state convention.

Curtis had told the Vietnam-Veterans Against the War, sponsors of the rally, that he supported their objectives. His message was sent before the protest began and at a time when the VVAW said the protest would be peaceful and non-violent.

Later, the demonstrators cut down an American and state flag outside the armory, hanged an effigy of President Nixon and shouted obscenities and threw food at the vice president's car as he was leaving the convention hall.

New Interdisciplinary Center Proposed

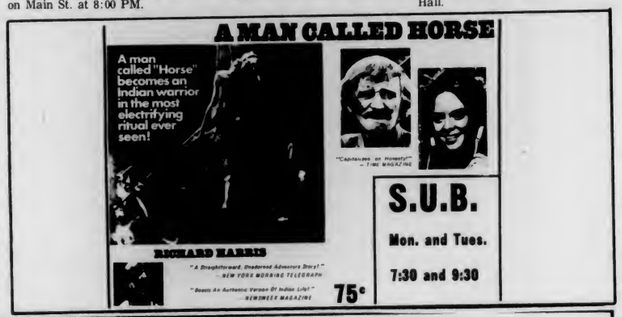
A recent proposal by a committee of UMass professors has been made to establish a Center for Interdisciplinary Studies in the Social Sciences and Humanities. The program would concentrate its efforts in three areas; Social Thought, Psychology and Literature and Political Economy.

According to their proposal, many students and members of the faculty are strongly interested in pursuing organized studies, at the undergraduate and graduate levels, in areas which do not fit easily into the disciplinary structure of the University.

This program can hopefully establish a vehicle for the development of such interests. The Center has four main aims: 1) To establish programs in the three mentioned areas. 2) Launch faculty seminars in the three areas. 3) Develope new courses tailored to the needs of the Center. 4) Finally, develop graduate programs in the stated areas.

By employing the mechanism of the Bachelor's Degree in Individualized Concentration program, which already exists, the organization hopes to go into operation for the fall of 1972. If the program is successful, steps will be taken to follow through on the four major goals.

Students who are currently freshmen or sophomores, and who have interests in the stated areas are now eligible. A counselor from the program will do all necessary paper work for the BDIC program and advise on courses for the coming semester.



This is not a certified major, as was previously announced. It does need students for its success and then the possibility of such a major may become a reality. For further information and counseling, Professor Robert Wolff will be holding special office hours Tuesday, May 9 from 2-4 p.m. His office is located in 704 Thompson Hall.

Westover Protests Planned

After two weeks of non-violent civil disobedience actions and almost 400 arrests by people standing witness against the War at Westover AFB in Chicopee, it has been decided that the Demonstrations will Continue.

A group of people meeting at the home of James Matlack of Amherst planned the demonstrations for this Tuesday and Thursday, May 9 and 11, of this week, meeting on the Amherst Green at 6:30 AM and at Westover main entrance at 7:15. There is also a planned Demonstration on Saturday, May 13, where people will meet on the common at 9:15 and at Westover at 10:00 AM.

It has been continually stressed that the demonstrations are non-violent and to insure that both those who will be arrested and supporters know what to expect and how to act, workshops are scheduled for Monday, Wed. and Friday evenings at the First Congregational Church of Amherst on Main St. at 8:00 PM.

MG MIDGET

These days you don't have to look very far to find a small, economical car.

But to find one that's economical and a pure-bred, SCCA-winning sports car—well, that leaves you a choice of about one.

MG Midget.

Just the right size for you, your friend and enough gear to see you through a weekend.

You'll discover that the real meaning of "sports motoring" has nothing to do with ¼-mile strips at abandoned airports.

It has to do with roads that take to the hills where the scenery and fresh air are. Roads that turn and twist and meander down the other side, faithful to the contours of nature.

That's where terms like rack-and-pinion steering, front disc brakes, race-seasoned suspension and a close-ratio 4-speed gearbox, start making sense to the uninitiated.

And you'll wonder how you ever drove without full sports car instrumentation: an electric tachometer, separate gauges for oil pressure, water temperature and fuel level. There's even a trip odometer.

MG Midget sports other standards like a 1275 c.c. overhead valve engine, mag-style wheels, radial-ply tires, leather steering wheel cover, reclining bucket seats, full carpeting and three-blade windshield wipers.

What do you pay for this small economical sports car? Of all the proven winners now in national SCCA sports car racing, it's the one with the lowest price tag.

A little for a lot of sports car.

George Couldn't Hack It

WASHINGTON (LNS) — With much flourish and fanfare, Housing and urban Development Secretary George Romney announed in 1970 that he was a good sport and would voluntarily return 25% of his salary to the Treasury "as my personal contribution" to the fight against inflation.

Well, it didn't work--not only did no one join Geo~ge in his lonely sacrifice, but inflation is still raging out of control. And George, not one to go down with the ship, has quietly restored himself to full pay.

Indians Fight For Long Hair

LAWTON, Okla. (LNS)-Lawton, Oklahoma is a city of about 60,000 in southern Oklahoma. It's population is perhaps doubled by the presence of GIs stationed at nearby Ft. Sill. It also has a sizeable number of Native Americans whose families used to won the land where the city now stands.

Since September the Indian community has been holding demonstrations to protest the expulsion from school of three Indian brothers-George, Donny, and David Wise--for wearing braids. Their mother, Frances Wise, has been leading the fight to allow them to wear braids. Her forebears met Coronado when he entered south central Oklahoma in the 1540s. Her great grandfather ran away from a U.S. Indian school rather than comply with the regulation to cut his hair.

On April 10, the students won one round of the fight and lost another.

Charges were dropped against 9 of 17 arrested for trespassing and failure to obey a police officer at a demonstration protesting the schoolboard's ruling. The other 8 were convicted and plan to appeal their $150 fines.

The same day, three more Indian youths were expelled from school for long hair.

At the trial, before an all-white jury, one of the arresting officers mistakenly identified a Chippawa Indian spectator (who had just arrived from Minnesota that day) as one of the demonstrators.

Scott Cade, one of the people convicted and fined, has two other charges against him. An ex-GI and a member of the GI project that puts out Barrage, an anti-war, anti-brass paper, Cade has been a target for police harassment. He has been convicted of dealing marijuana and sentenced to seven years (currently on appeal) and was also charged with felonious assault in a strange case involving an admitted FBI agent who was trying to plant grass in the Barrage staff house.

Legal funds are needed by the Native Americans. Send what you can to either Frances M. Wise (NARM), 1413 H. St., Lawton, Okla. 73501.

Lawton's GI project has born the brunt of much harassment in recent months. In mid-April tear gas grenades were thrown into the project house two nights in a row.

On the first night, April 15, two police cars were parked right in front of the house watching as a man ran from the house after hurling a gas grenade through the window. They made no attempt to arrest him.

The next night no police responded to a call from the Barrage house following another tear gas attack forcing someone from the house to drive into town to find them. Their car was followed to the police station and back by cops, but the police made no effort to help.

Anti-Honeywell Meeting

An open meeting has been called by Western Massachusetts Clergy and Laity Concerned for next Tuesday at 8 P.M. to explore ways in which people in Western Massachusetts can bring pressure against Honeywell and other major war contractors.

The Rev. Samuel M. Johnson of the United Christian Foundation at UMass attended the annual Honeywell stockholders meeting in Minneapolis as a representative of the group. Honeywell has 17% of its business with the Department of Defense, and is involved in the manufacture of the anti-personnel "guava" bomb, alleged to be used against civilians in Vietnam.

The meeting will be held at St. John's Episcopal Church on Elm Street in Northampton. Interested people can contact either the Rev. Frank Dorman at 253-5055 or the Rev. Samuel Johnson at 545-2789.

Talbot To Speak

Dr. Lee Talbot, Senior Scientist, President's Council on Environmental Quality, will speak on "The Function of Environmental Impact Statements in Management of the Environment" in the Student Union Ballroom on May 10 at 8:30 p.m. following the Sigma Xi Banquet for new members. The public is invited to hear this speaker. Sigma Xi members are reminded to return payment for the banquet to Dr. Robert Duby, 300 Stockbridge Hall by Monday, May 8.

Matchmakers: Widower's Woe

NEW YORK (AP)-One of the woes of a widower is the number of sweet young things who try to get him to remarry, if only so he'll have someone to wake him up when it's time to take his medicine.

The trouble is they have the idea that if they throw any widower together with any widow of fading divorcee, the two will happily melt and merge as if they had no more personality than a couple of drops of water. They forget that people at any age are still individual people, not crutuches looking for a mate.

Here is a typical conversation I had the other day with one of these ambitious young matchmakers:

"I can't understand why you didn't go crazy for my aunt. You have so much in common. After all, her first husband had the gout, too-just like you."

"She's too rich."

"What a ridiculous thing-to regard a woman;s wealth as a handicap. Why?"

"It isn't that it's a handicap. It's because her wealth is a club. I never knew a rich woman who married a poor man who could refrain from using her money to beat to death the only thing in himself he had price in-his character. I'm too old and proud and wise to marry a bank account."

"Well, what is it you want in a woman beside poverty, oh venerable one?"

"First of all, a sense of humor."

"Why?"

"Because I'm tired of laughing at and by myslef. No one needs anyone else to cry with. But fun is only half-fun when it's alone."

"What else do you insist on?"

"That she have amnesia."

"Why, for heaven's sake?"

"So she'd forget my faults and also be unable to recall and remind me of her first husband's many virtues."

"Any other requirements?"

"Yes, I'd want her to know how to sew a button on right side up. I'd want her to enjoy people and love books. I'd want her to sing like Julie Andrews, look as sweet as Helen Hayes, and to be able to cook as well as James Beard.

"What age would you want a second wife to be?"

"Oh, young enough to enjoy it but old enough to know better."

"If you don't mind me saying so, Hal, you're awful picky and choosy."

"Well, if a fellow can't pick, why should he choose to remarry at all? A second marriage isn't like going to a hospital, where you have to take whatever nurse is on floor duty."

The sweet young thing thought for a moment, then said:

"I can think of only one women who would make a perfect wife for you."

"Who's that?" I asked.

"Lady Luck," she said.

See what I mean? Everybody has a right to pick a widower's second wife except himself.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Thoughts on the Aquarian Age, from Frances Gardner, of Phoenix, Ariz.: "It has been my personal experience to find that Aquarius is the most overrated sign of the zodiac. If we are to judge the coming Aquarian Age of those Aquarians it has been my misfortune to know, then the Aquarian Age will be one of moral cowardice, mealy mouthed deception, interference in the affairs of others, constant fault finding, the urge to dictate, selfishness, impatience, unreliability and the inability to see further than I, me and mine. It has been my unfortunate experience, with these people, to learn that their so-called humanitarianism is only a thinkly veiled disguise to obtain their own way."
Frances Gardner, Phoenix, Ariz.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Strive for reunion with loved one. Clandestine meeting may be necessary. Make conciliatory gesture. Don't permit false pride to block chance for greater happiness. Taurus and Libra persons are in picture.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be receptive to overture by Aries. You gain if facts are accepted. Review costs. Don't make financial commitment. Time is on your side. You have right to know direction, goal and odds for success. Insist!
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be ready for added duty, extra assignment, more responsibility. You asked for certain opportunities. Now, you get chance to prove your point. There is room at top. But you work for what you obtain.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): Finish what you start. Obtain hint from Gemini message. Broaden horizons. Plan ahead. Outline needs. Visualize goal. One who is ultraconservative is attempting to instill self doubt. Remain optimistic.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take care where funds, assets are concerned. What appears extraordinary proposal may actually lack depth. Ask for credentials. Take nothing for granted. Some friends may by misinformed. Get at truth.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Play waiting game. Don't jump at first offer. Let mate, partner have say. Do plenty of listening, observing. You learn valuable lessons. Accent is on negotiation with one who needs your services. Don't sell yourself short.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stress versatile approach. Be sociable. Accept invitation. Others may now be better equipped to handle details. Take long range view. See picture as a whole. Sagittarian can lend helping hand. Do some laughing.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Many preconceived notions are thrown aside. Be forthright, creative. Hear sound of your own voice. Means develop individual methods, style. Mate, partner may be having problems with budget. Lend hand.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Protect image. Promote better public relations. Get message across. Be sure you are correctly quoted. Check messages, calls and correspondence. Build on solid base. Leave no loose ends. Gemini is in picture.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Maintain low profile. Be diplomatic rather than insistent. Family member is willing to make concessions. Realize this and act accordingly. Taurus and Libra persons are very much in picture.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Don't permit emotions to dictate financial policy. See in realistic light. Perfect techniques. Get rid of nonessentials. Trim budget. Guard valuables. If careless, you will lose. Act accordingly.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Apply knowledge. Ambitions can be fulfilled. Know it and act like you know it. Be confident. Utilize experience, contacts made in recent past. Correct decision in property area can result in greater security.
IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can be a veritable powerhouse. When you decide to do something, it usually gets done. There is no halfway about your efforts. You go all out and your efforts usually pay dividends. If single, marriage may be in picture around September.

Rains Swamp Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Thousands of Chileans were left homeless Sunday by driving rain that inundated shanty town settlements, flooded roads and disrupted electric and telephone service.

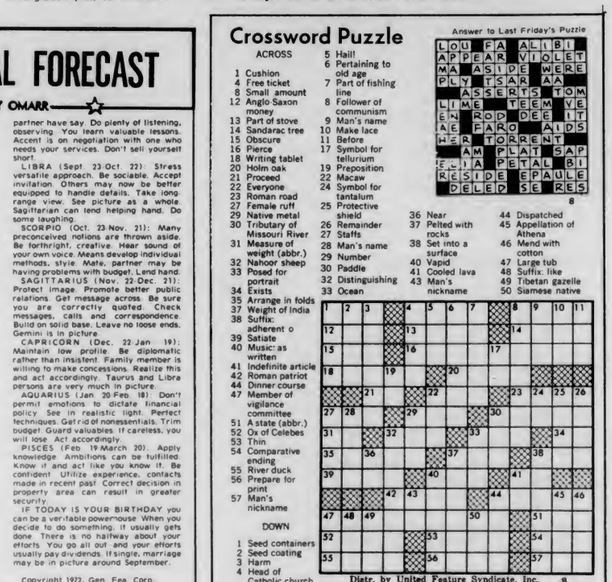
The rains, caused by a cold front sweeping in from the Pacific Ocean, began Friday night and continued through Sunday.

The rain was accompanied by near-freezing temperatures, signalling the advent of winter in this south-of-the-equator country.

Hardest hit, as always during such storms, were residents of dozens of shanty towns built on vacant lots around the periphery of the capital.

These communities of wood and cardboard shacks are inhabited by people from the Chilean countryside who migrate to Santiago looking for work. Many of the shanty towns are run by political groups or extremist organizations.

The government estimated Saturday night that 12,000 persons were without homes, almost all of them from these shanty towns.



At Settlement Che Guevara, named after the Argentine-Cuban Guerrilla leader, the unpaved allies around the shacks were a sea of mud. Residents of the settlement worked with shovels digging trenches to divert the flooding.

Two deaths were reported at other settlements. At one, a mother of two died of exposure. At another, an infant drowned.

Answer to Last Friday's Puzzle

Distr. by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Riva Ridge following a long line of Thoroughbred aristocracy won the Kentucky Derby last Saturday. The colt, who was one of the top favorites, lead the field of sixteen all the way. His performance has been compared to that of the greatest race horse ever, Man O' War. (AP Wirephoto)

Riva Takes Derby

LOUISVILLE (AP) - There were few disbelievers in Riva Ridge before Saturday's Kentucky Derby. Now there are none.

"I told myself after the Hibiscus March 22 I should stay away from Riva Ridge, and the only trouble is that I didn't listen to myself," Arnold Winick said Sunday.

Winick, trainer for Mrs. Maribel Blum, had seen his colt, Hold Your Peace, fail in three strong efforts to pull alongside Riva Ridge in the Derby and finally fade to a third place finish.

Homer Pardue, trainer of the second finisher, No Le Hace, was a believer, too.

"There was just no way to beat that horse," he said.

And Lucien Laurin, Riva Ridge's trainer, was comparing him to Citation, Man O' War, Whirlaway and the other thoroughbred greats of yesteryear.

"I think he's as great as any horse that's been around," Laurin said. "He's as good as Citation and if you want to go back to Man O' War, well, that's a little before my day."

Laurin said he would ship the Meadow Stable star to Pimlico Tuesday to prepare for the May 20 Preakness, the second jewel in racing's Triple Crown and a race he has never won.

The others in the 16-horse Derby field let Winick speak for them all.

"Wherever Riva Ridge is going, I'm going someplace else," he said.

Pardue, whose No Le Hace was gaining just a little ground at the Derby finish, said "We might try him in the Belmont where we'd have more ground, but I doubt if we'll go in the Preakness."

In the Derby's 1 1/4 miles, Riva Ridge led every step of the way, finishing 3 1/4 lengths in front of No Le Hace, with Hold Your Peace another 3 1/2 lengths back and the same distance in front of Introductivo.

The Preakness is 1 3/16 miles and the Belmont June 10 1 1/2 miles.

Bruins Win 3-2 Over N.Y.

NEW YORK (AP) - Super-star Bobby Orr, playing on only one good leg, scored two goals and assisted on a third Sunday and led the Boston Bruins to a 3-2 victory over New York in the fourth game of their National Hockey League Stanley Cup championship playoff.

The fifth game of the best-of-seven series will be played Tuesday night in Boston, where the Bruins, now holding a 3-1 edge, can clinch their second Stanley Cup in the last three years.

Orr, who will undergo surgery on his left knee as soon as the playoffs end, scored twice early in the opening period and then assisted on a short-handed goal by Don Marcotte late in the second period.

The Bruins and the Rangers, brawling throughout in a game that wound up with 104 penalty minutes, were well on their way to a rousing game when Orr connected at 5:26 of the first period.

Mike Walton had intercepted a clearing pass by Ranger defenseman Jim Dorey and sent Orr in on goalie Ed Giacomin. Orr hit the upper left hand corner of the net for his third goal of the playoffs.

Less than three minutes later, Orr was back again, this time bouncing a power play shot off New York defenseman Brad Park and into the Ranger net.

Next, the Bruins' penalty killers, who had stung New York for two goals in the opening game of this series, struck again.

Walton was in the penalty box when Orr raced down the ice and set up Marcotte for the third goal.

The Rangers battled back, getting a goal from Ted Irvine in the final two minutes of the second period and another one from defenseman Rod Seiling with 1:25 left in the game.

They lifted Giacomin but the Bruins withstood the final-minute assault for the victory.

Orr missed several turns in the second period and was missing from the Boston bench for at least seven minutes. But he was on the ice when the Bruins needed him. His three scoring points gave him 22 for the playoffs this year, breaking his own Stanley Cup scoring record of 20 for a defenseman set two years ago.

Referee Bruce Hood doled out 76 minutes in penalties through the brawl-filled opening period. There were fights between New York's Bobby Rousseau and Boston's Derek Sanderson; Don Awrey of the Bruins and Gene Carr of the Rangers; Park and Orr; and New York's Glen Sather and Boston's Johnny McKenzie.

Boston's Ed Westfall and McKenzie also drew 10-minute misconduct penalties.

Indy Speed Record Broken

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Gary Bettenhausen, Tinley Park, Ill., broke the 190-miles-per-hour barrier Sunday at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway during a practice session for the May 27 Indianapolis 500-mile race.

Bettenhausen twice was clocked with laps over 190 m.p.h. and said later he believed his Penske-McLaren car would go faster.

The laps, run under cloudy and threatening mid-afternoon skies, were 190.235 and then 190.315, the fastest unofficial lap ever registered during a May practice session.

During tire tests in March, Bobby Unser was clocked at 190.8 m.p.h. The speed is more than 10 miles per hour over the official track record set by Peter Revson during last year's qualifications for the Indy 500.

Revson turned a 179.354 lap while gaining the pole position in the 1971 race. Only clockings during qualifications or the race are official.

Bettenhausen came to the Speedway off a victory in the Trenton 200-mile championship car race several weeks ago, which put him in the United State Auto Club point lead in that category.

The crowd seemed to anticipate Bettenhausen's 190 laps when he came on the track Sunday afternoon. After a couple of warmup laps, he turned it on and drew continuous applause from the crowd estimated by USAC officials at 15,000.

Stickers Crush New Hampshire

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

It was a good day to run, shoot, and score for the Redmen Stickers up in Wildcat country. Saturday the UMass Lacrosse Team crushed New Hampshire 15-9 to capture the Yankee Conference Title and gain another rung up the ladder towards qualifying for the USILA post tournament games.

Garber's Gorillas started off leading with three straight goals. However, the Wildcats picked up with help from one of their top scorers Teddy Garber (Coach Garber's son, a Frosh at UNH) to up the score 7-5 by halftime. The Redmen got a good start in the third quarter scoring 4 goals in three minutes which broke the game wide open. This flurry of goals included "picture" scoring with sharp shooting and pinpoint passing.

Dana Stone started the Red score going less than a minute into the first quarter with the help of Charley Hardy.

After the second face-off the ball was run down to the Blue goal, passed around, thrown to Dwight Blomquist then to John Nagle who scored.

Freshman John Martin aided by Hardy took his turn for a point with 6 minutes left in the quarter upping the score 3-0 for the Red.

However, the Wildcats broke through the Gorilla defense when Teddy Garber unassisted threw a lucky bounce shot straight in the Red goal.

Right after the start of the second quarter, Garber again ran it down the field and shot. The score stood 3-2, the Redmen had to start moving.

With 5:45 left in the period, Hardy unassisted scored his own goal. Then a minute later, Bruce Sibson ran the ball down the field passing it to Hardy who gained another point for the Red.

Seconds later, Stone made a sure shot at the Blue goal assisted by Paul Ritch upping the score 6-2 for UMass.

The Wildcats fired up by this series of Red points broke forth with 3 of their own. Jim Dreyer assisted by Gary Fincke made a Fast Break Goal.

Bob McCarthy scored with a bounce shot.

Then, Garber picked up the ball at the sideline just before it went out of bounds to shoot and score from behind the crease line.

The situation was tense, the score 6-5, too close for comfort. With 24 seconds left to the half, Blomquist scooped up the ball after Hirsh Seidman won the face-off and upped the score 7-5.

The Red Machine had to move that ball and start rolling if they wanted to win. They scored the next 5 straight goals.

Seconds into the last half, Hardy from behind the goal threw the ball to Nagle who shot it in.

Right afterwards, Blomquist assisted by Ritch gained another.

Nagle scored again aided by Hardy, then, so did Ritch.

The Wildcats a little stunned by this bombardment of goals, continued their control until there was just 4 minutes left to the period when Hardy shot with the help of Blomquist.

Wildcats broke through again when Bob Moore made a bounce shot.

At the start of the last quarter, the score stood 12-6 for the Red. Hardy assisted both Ritch and Nagle to gain the next 2 points.

With 11 minutes left in the period, defenseman Kevin Carpenger scooped up the ball around the Red goal, ran it down the field passing it to Nagle who scored the last goal for the Redmen.

UNH picked up and made their last 3 goals scored by Heard, Glynn, and Fincke in the final minutes of the game.

Final score of the game stood 15-9, another victory for the Redmen Stickers, now Yankee Conference Champs, boosting up their record 9-3 to date.

Top game scorer was Nagle with 5 goals and then Hardy with 3 goals and 6 assists.

Coach Garber after the game cited, "This was a game of contrasts for us. We had our up and down moments of play. Outstanding effort was displayed by Tri-Captain Dana Stone.

JV Nine Drop Two Games.....Varsity Wins Two

By JOHN BOCK

There is a lot to be said for down the street rivalries. They bring out the fans, psych the players and generally make any athletic contest sparkle with a little extra.

The difference in the JV baseball doubleheader with Springfield College, held at Lorden Field Saturday, was that only one out of those three facets of rivalry was present. "A little extra" was in the offing in that both teams had identical 8-0 records and a win or loss was going to make all the difference in how the remainder of the season would come out.

One can't really say that either team was psyched and the crowd certainly didn't break attendance figures. The decisive factor Luck. But whatever it was, it cost the Redmen JV's to drop the twin bill 11-5 and 15-6.

Jeff Osborne got the nod to start and did a respectable job but was retired in the sixth inning. He managed two scoreless innings and then at the top of the third, with two on and one out, a base hit between first and second combined with an error on the throw to third caused two SC runs to score.

The Redmen got on the scoreboard in the bottom of the fifth as Shortstop Bill "Wheels" MacDonald walked on and then stole second, to be followed with walk. Both men were advanced by an excellent bunt from the hands of centerfielder Paul Hermanski. Rightfielder Charlie Barnaby doubled to left and drove in two runs to tie it up. Then catcher John Healy singled and was followed by Jim Russel's single that earned him an RBI and put UMass on the lead 4-2.

That was the last time the Redmen were in the lead as the sixth inning proved to be disastrous with SC scoring four runs to regain a lead they didn't relinquish. The first two men were retired, one a short grounder to the pitcher and the second on a diving-twisting catch by MacDonald at short. Then the roof fell in as with three on and two out, a home run made it 6-4 Springfield.

One more run was scored by UMass as John Healy came in on a single by Jim Russel.

The second game wasn't any better, but the JV's didn't exactly roll over and play dead if a four-run rally in the ninth says anything about the comeback power of the team. Mark Prince drove in a run to make it 1-0 Redmen and another was added later but nothing else appeared in the scorebook until the last of the ninth. Then Mike Phillips led off with a two-run homer and this was followed by triples from Billy MacDonald and Jim Russel. Perhaps the day was best summarized by Paul Hermanski's blast that was destined to be a round tripper but fell two feet short, like so many other attempts of the afternoon.

Disappointed was the only way to describe Coach Warren Mason's tone of voice in describing his team's loss. "Our pitching failed us and we beat ourselves with nine errors overall. It isn't that we weren't playing well, it was mistakes at a few crucial times that cost us the games. In addition we had to shuffle our starting lineup due to injuries and missing players."

The JV's have today to take care of those problems as tomorrow at 3:30 on the JV field, the Huskies of UConn come to do battle a second time. Bob Langoise has drawn the starting assignment and there is the promise of an exciting game as the Redmen left UConn stinging with a 6-3 loss the last time around.

By BILL BALLOU

There is still life in what was thought to be the dying body of the UMass baseball team.

The Redmen, who saw their playoff hopes diminish when they dropped a two-game set to Maine up in Orono last weekend, came right back this weekend by winning a home and home set against a sometimes troublesome University of New Hampshire team.

UMass had come into the series facing a must win, do or die, situation if their upcoming games against Connecticut were to have any meaning. They were able to "do", and keep kicking, by beating UNH 10-4 at home on Friday and then going up to Durham and dumping the Wildcats in their own den by a score of 8-0.

Friday's victory was not exactly accomplished as the script had planned. It was supposed to be a pitcher's duel. Instead the day belonged to the batters.

Lefty Tom White, the ace of the UMass staff, started for the Redmen and got the win, but it was not a typical White performance. He was knocked out after 5-1/3 innings and bailed out by some heavy hitting by Mark Palau (5 RBI's) and great relief by Tom Austin.

The win on Saturday afternoon was courtesy of Mike Flanagan's brilliant shutout pitching. The freshman lefthander had a perfect game going into the fifth inning and ended up giving UNH just three hits.

UMass was able to reach Paul Cormier for 10 hits over the route. In fact the Redmen treated the two UNH "aces" Cormier and Pete Dresser, rather rudely throughout the weekend.

Tune in tomorrow for more details of what looks more and more to be a very interesting week of baseball.

UMass Crew Team Bows

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

For the third straight time, the UMass Crew Team, despite a shake-up in the lineup, finished behind the leaders. The unbeaten Northeastern rowers churned up the Charles River Saturday enroute to a record setting performance over Boston University and the Redmen oarsmen.

This was the first time that the rowers had participated in the Charles Classic and it was to be a very disappointing morning, as the NU varsity and JV units set school river records and the NU frosh tied a University course record. BU also managed to stay in front of the Redmen.

Winning time for NU was 5:58.4, closely followed by BU by four seconds, but the unmatched NU shell roared in a time of 6:03.8, approximately 13 seconds ahead of the two battling boats. The UMass yearlings finished way back of the pack, three lengths behind NU and a length behind BU.

Once again, the UMass oarsmen had faced to very good shells and just could not keep up with them. Next week is the Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia, where the competition will not be as tough in the Crew Team's division. The favorite will be Coast Guard, which won at LakeWickabog, but there is chance that the Redmen can finish in a winning way.

N. Viet Harbors To Be Mined

Nixon Calls N. Viets 'International Outlaws'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon Monday night ordered North Vietnamese harbors sealed to Soviet shipping by air-dropped mines timed to activate in three days.

The President went on nationwide television and radio to tell the American people he has also directed U.S. forces to interdict all North Vietnamese supply lines, including "the internal and claimed territorial waters of North Vietnam."

This would be coupled with continued bombing of the North which was extended earlier Monday to the Hanoi area for the first time in three weeks.

According to notification sent by the State Department to the United Nations Security Council the entrances to Haiphong and other harbors were mined starting at 9 p.m. EDT Monday. The mines were set to explode on contact beginning at 6 a.m. EDT Thursday.

The President's action, ranking with the toughest of all American military operations in the Vietnam war, also involves bombing of all other supply lines, including railroads that carry the bulk of both Soviet and Chinese military aid.

The President called on the Soviet Union to realize the intensified U.S. military action was not directed against its people or interests.

But the towering question of the Soviet reactionto moves that no doubt will be charged to be at least a near act of war, remained totally unanswered in the hours immediately after the speech.

The White House switchboard was jammed with calls, however, and leading political figures were starting to issue statements, generally along predictable and party lines.

House Republican leader Gerald Ford of Michigan said the President had taken "the only way to end the Vietnam war," while Massachusetts Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said the "decision is ominous."

But it was the Soviet Union that Nixon singled out in saying Hanoi's aggression was possible only because of outside aid, and he issued this call to Moscow:

Declaring intensification of military force is the only choice left to the United States, the President coupled the action with this call on the Soviet Union:

"Let us not slide back toward the dark shadows of a previous age. We do not ask you to sacrifice your principles or your friends. But neither should you permit Hanoi's intransigence to blot out the prospects we together have so patiently prepared."

Looking toward his scheduled visit to Moscow later this month, the President added:

"We are on the threshhold of a new relationship that can serve not only the interests of our two countries but the cause of world peace. We are prepared to continue to build this relationship. This responsibility is yours if we fail to do so."

After outlining what he said were the determined American effort to negotiate a settlement, Nixon said North Vietnam has made it clear it has no interest in peace.

Therefore, Nixon went on, "There is only one way to stop the killing, and that is to keep the weapons of war out of the hands of the international outlaws of North Vietnam."

He added:

"In full coordination with the Republic of Vietnam, I have ordered the following measures which are being implemented as I am speaking to you.

"1. All entrances to North Vietnamese ports will be mined to prevent access to these ports and North Vietnamese naval operations from these ports.

"2. United States forces have been directed to take appropriate measures within the internal and claimed territorial waters of North Vietnam to interdict the delivery of supplies.

"3. Rail and all other communcations will be cut off to the maximum extent possible.

"4. Air and naval strikes against military targets in North Vietnam will continue."

Without using the word, the President took action amounting to a blockade of North Vietnam, which is even tougher than the so-called "quarantine President John F. Kennedy applied during the 1962 Cuban missile crisis.

The President told his broadcast audience the reason he ordered the drastic measures was to protect the lives of the 60,000 American troops still in South Vietnam and to prevent the military conquest of 17 million South Vietnamese.

"In these circumstances, with 60,000 Americans threatened," Nixon said somberly, "any President who failed to act decisively would have betrayed the trust of his country and the cause of peace."

Nixon said these were the only reasons. "These actions are not directed against any other nation. Countries with ships presently in North Vietnamese ports have been notified that their ships will have three daylight periods to leave in safety.

"After that time, the mines will become active and any ships attempting to leave or enter these ports will do so at their own risks."

Stressing his claim that the United States is not interested in conquest, Nixon gave the terms which would end the New American acts.

"First, all American prisoners of war must be returned.

"Second, there must be an internationally supervised cease-fire throughout Indochina.

"Once prisoners of war are released, and once the internationally supervised cease-fire has begun, we will stop all acts of force throughout Indochina.

"At that time we will proceed with a complete withdrawal of all American forces from Vietnam within four months."

In this, Nixon seemed to be setting his most definite and shortest period of a U.S. withdrawal target date, but he also evidently expanded his demands on Hanoi by calling for North Vietnam to stop fighting in all of Indochina.

The President ended his speech with a plea for unity, which was underscored by a meeting he held with congressional leaders an hour before he went on television and radio at 9 p.m. EDT.

While he made no mention of his Moscow trip, scheduled to start May 22, and while the White House said earlier plans were proceeding, it was evident Nixon had the Russian attitude on his mind.

He called on Moscow to continue the negotiations he said had made "significant progress" in recent months, and national security adviser Henry Kissinger met Monday

Groups Organize For Trustee Meeting

By KEVIN KEVIT

After lengthy debate, representatives from the Faculty Senate, ROTC, and the Center for Social Change last night agreed upon the order in which their presentations on the issues of the continuance of on-campus recruitment, ROTC, and defense-related research will be given at Wednesday's meeting of the Board of Trustees.

The trustee meeting will begin with addresses by Chancellors Bromery and Broderick of the UMass-Amherst and Boston campuses respectively. These will be followed by two half-hour presentations, one by Amherst-campus based organizations and one from those on the Boston campus. The allotted half-hour for the Amherst-campus organizations was structured with:

5-10 minutes for the Faculty Senate

5 minutes for the Marketing Club

10 minutes for the Center for Social Change and 5 minutes for ROTC

in that order.

Since the Marketing Club is expected to speak in favor of reinstating on-campus recruitment, and ROTC will be speaking in its own behalf, their combined time limits correspond to the ten minutes allowed to the Center for Social Change, which will be speaking against future presence of ROTC, recruiting, and defense-related research on campus.

Robert Wellman, representing the Faculty Senate at last night's meeting, explained that that organization's portion of the half hour will be divided into speeches made by himself and Joseph Burroughs, also of the Faculty Senate. According to Wellman, Burroughs will speak about the Faculty Senate's recent decision to withdraw academic credit from

Leafletting, Blockading Planned For Nixon Protest

By MDC Staff

Local protests against President Nixon's blockades of North Vietnamese ports will include massive leafletting and partial blockades of several area roads and bridges for the next two days.

Shortly after 11 P.M. last night, students started filtering into the Student Union to decide upon courses of actions to take in protest against President Nixon's blockade of North Vietnamese ports.

John Bretlinger led the discussion of possible protest actions.

The frontrunning contender for the protest actions being discussed by the nearly 250 students centered on the idea of a partial or total blockade of bridges spanning the Connecticut River and other area roads.

Under a partial blockade, cars would be stopped long enough to receive information, analyses, and blank form letters. Under a total blockade no cars would be allowed through except for bona fide emergencies, such as trips to the hospital.

The meeting, spontaneous in nature but started by the Center for Social Change, started in the Colonial Lounge but moved into the Student Union at the end of the movie being shown there. At that time, the colonial Lounge was starting to overflow.

One woman said she had spoken to Food Service workers who would encourage people to stay away from work today, also. Other specific proposals included blocking Route 116 and University Drive, supporting the Westover Air Force Base demonstrations, and leafletting the entire area including Springfield factories.

Arguments against total blockades included the alienation of those people blocked and a quick end by police action. As the Collegian went to press, small groups were discussing special actions.

Trustee Meeting

ROTC, urging enforcement of this resolution by the beginning of next semester, while he will call for each campus to decide the outcomes of these issues in a democratic and autonomous manner. "Only when a decision made on one campus will affect conditions on the other should a pan-campus conference be called," Wellman said, expressing uncertainty that the current issues are of that nature.

Recently-circulated petitions for and against the continued presence of ROTC on campus will be presented to the trustees at Wednesday's meeting. According to Student Senate President Larry Ladd, who called and moderated last night's meeting, the result of the petitioning seems inconclusive at this time. Yesterday's Collegian erroneously reported that pro R.O.T.C. forces had "won" the petitioning.

Since the location of the trustee meeting, which will be held on the tenth floor of the Campus Center at 1 P.M. on Wednesday, will obviously restrict the number of people who will be allowed to attend, a closed-circuit television broadcast of the proceedings will most likely be presented in either the Campus Center Auditorium or the Blue Wall Cafeteria.

The Weather

By KENNY SULIN

Today's weather calls for more of the same drizzle we've been getting lately with highs in the mid-fifties. It will be cloudy and a bit cooler with rain ending by tomorrow night, lows near forty. It seems eventually we'll worm our way out of this misery.

$5,000 Raised For Belchertown

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Approximately $5,000 was raised at the free concert Sunday in support of the Belchertown State School class-action suit.

Tom Blanchette, spokesman for Students Offering Support, (SOS) said the exact figure will not be known until later in the week when all expenses involved in the fund raising are taken into account.

He added that the $5,000 represented profits from concessions sold during the concert and direct contributions from those in attendence.

UMass Professor Ben Ricci, leading organizer of the suit and president of the Belchertown Friends Association, said the money raised would cover all the costs up to the present date entailed in the legal court action.

The suit filed by 28 parents in federal court last February charges that the state Department of Mental Health has been negligent in the care of residents at the Belchertown State School.

Ricci said, "It is gratifying to know that students care enough to support us in this extremely important case."

He said in an interview that the case has implications not only for the Belchertown School, but also for all state institutions in the country.

The idea of the Concert Committee and SOS co-sponsoring a benefit concert for the Belchertown suit came out of a compromise in the Student Senate between individuals, who favored a concert and individuals, who were against a concert.

Joe Sylvia, SOS chairman, said, "The large sum of money seems to be compensating students for their past efforts in bringing about reform at the Belchertown School."

Sylvia gave thanks to the Concert Committee for "allowing us to utilize some of their organization for the fund raising and giving us our largest source of funds."

On the impact of the $5,000 on the future of the suit, Ricci replied, "It's nice to feel that this pressure of collecting funds is relieved a little to enable us to concentrate our efforts on more important related matters."

MDC staff reporter Bob Callahan said he was pleased with the final results of the concert and the fund raising drive.

Callahan's front page editorial on March 1 asked that money to be used for the concert be transferred to SOS as a means of supporting the Belchertown suit.

Callahan yesterday said in an interview, "The idea of the editorial was not to stop the concert, but to bring out into the open the problems and conditions at the Belchertown State School.

"Up to the time of the editorial against the concert things had been going slow," continued Callahan. "The editorial served as a catalysts to start things moving."

Nixon Vietnam Speech

night with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin to inform him of the American decisions.

In outlinging the steps he said the United States had taken to achieve a peaceful solution, Nixon said he had sent Kissinger to Moscow for four days of talks last month.

He said the Russian leaders showed an interest in bringing the war to an end.

On May 2, Nixon said, Kissinger met privately with Le Duc Tho, a member of the party leadership in Hanoi. But he said the North Vietnamese were unyielding, in private as well as in later public sessions.

Nixon said the refusal of terms he called "the maximum any President...could offer" left him no choice but to take the military steps he announced.

He referred repeatedly to the 60,000 American troops still in South Vietnam, saying that inaction in the face of the Communist offensive would jeopardize their lives.

There are only two issues left, he said.

"Do we stand by, jeopardize the lives of 60,000 Americans and leave the South Vietnamese to a long night of terror?" he asked.

Immediate withdrawal of those men, he said, would leave South Vietnam in danger of Communist takeover.

"We will not cross the line from generosity to treachery," he said.

The President's Cabinet was at the White House while he delivered his 17-minute speech and a spokesman said he was meeting with Cabinet members immediately after he concluded.

"There is only one way to stop the killing," Nixon said. "That is to keep the means to make war out of the hands of the international outlaws of North Vietnam."

He said the actions he ordered were underway as he addressed the nation.

At the same time, the United States notified the United Nations Security Council of the naval action to seal off the Communist ports.

"The entrances to the ports of North Vietnam are being mined, commencing 0900 Saigon time May 9, and the mines are set to activate automatically beginning 1800 hours Saigon time May 11," the U.S. notification said.

The action in mining the sea approaches to North Vietnam is bound to have impact on shipping of the Soviet Union, the chief sea supplier of the North Vietnamese.

It remained to see what, if any, effect the President's drastic action would have on the planned summit meeting in Moscow.

Within an hour before Nixon began his address, Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin arrived at the White House and met with Kissinger. What they discussed and how long the meeting lasted was not disclosed.

One Newman Freed, Other Held

(AP) An American news correspondent arrested while covering Fidel Castro in Africa was freed Monday, but a British newsman remained in custody in another African country.

Larry Heinzerling, 26, of The Associated Press, was taken into custody in Sierra Leone in northwest Africa on Sunday while covering a news conference of the Cuban prime minister and President Siaka Stevens, Castro's host.

President Stevens ordered Heinzerling released after he was held overnight at the headquarters of Sierra Leone's criminal investigation division in Freetown.

The president told Heinzerling that he had been detained because he lacked prior authorization to enter the Statehouse to attend the news conference.

Martin Meredith, 27, Zambia-based correspondent of the British Sunday newspaper, The Observer, remained under interrogation by authorities Monday night in Kampala, Uganda, in central Africa.

Meredith, in Uganda to interview President Idi Amin at the invitation of the Kampala government, was detained Sunday as he was about to board a plane for Kenya.

Meredith had previously told friends that Ugandan officials intercepted a story he wrote Friday night speculating on the outcome of the current inquiry into the disappearance of two Americans last July.

Primary Battle In W. Virginia

(AP) - Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey faces Sen. George McGovern in Nebraska's presidential primary, and confronts Gov. George C. Wallace in West Virginia Tuesday in another leg of the marathon race for the Democratic nomination for the White House.

Humphrey and McGovern both campaigned in Omaha Monday for a contest that looked like a tossup on election eve. Humphrey is favored to win in West Virginia.

In both states, the presidential preference polls are not binging: Democratic national convention delegates will be chosen separately and simultaneously. West Virginia is electing delegates to cast 35 nominating votes; in Nebraska, 22 of 24 are to be elected.

Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty staged in Nebraska his most intensive campaigning since the leadoff New Hampshire primary, where he drew only sparse support. In Lincoln, Yorty said McGovern is "a tool of the radical left," and called Humphrey a representative of "the old politics."

All told, there are 11 candidates on the presidential preference ballot, but Minnesota's Humphrey and South Dakota's McGovern are the real contenders.

The polls open in Nebraska beginning at 9 a.m., EDT, for 12 hours of balloting.

A crowded contest for national convention seats-297 candidates for 22 spots-could slow the election-night count.

Humphrey flew over to West Virginia Sunday and declared that "in 1960 you made a president, in 1972 you can make another president." In 1960, that state's primary unmade the Humphrey campaign and set the late John F. Kennedy on the path to the White House.

West Virginia polls open at 6:30 a.m. EDT Tuesday and close at 7 p.m. The ballot is complex there, too. In some counties, Democratic voters face a ballot listing more than 600 candidates for various positions.

In the West Virginia race, John D. Rockefeller IV is heavily favored to win the Democratic nomination to oppose Gov. Arch Moore, a Republican.

McGovern entered the Tuesday primaries leading in the competition for national convention delegates, with 313 1/2 committed for the first ballot. Humphrey had 238, Wallace 210, and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine 128 1/2.

Search Committee Seeks C.C. Head

By MDC Staff

A search committee for a permanent Director of the Student Union Campus Center Complex is currently being formed under the auspices of the Student Union Governing Board.

The committee has been charged with conducting a "full and extensive "search" for the position of Director. While the work of the committee will begin this summer, it is expected that the major amount of work will come at the beginning of next semester. The Search Committee is expected to report back to SUG Board with their recommendations by November 1.

The committee will be composed of 16 members, to be appointed in the following manner:

3 SUG Board members appointed by Chairperson of SUG Board

2 Students appointed by Chairperson of the SUG Board
1 professional C.C. management appointed by T. Grinnan
1 non-professional staff C.C. staff appointed by SUG Board
1 professional Student Activities person appointed by G. Scanlon
3 undergraduate students appointed by SGA president
2 graduate students appointed by president of graduate senate
1 faculty appointed by faculty senate
1 alumni appointed by Alumni Association
1 administrator appointed by Chancellor Bromery

Any students interested in being appointed to the committee should get in touch with Barry Cohen or Lisa Mandell in the SUG Board Office, located in the activities area of the Campus Center.

The Re-Organizational Task Force of SUG Board has come up with the following "general statement of duties" for the Director of the S.U. Complex: "to administer the efficient operations of the Campus Center - Student Union Complex, in accordance with the policies set out by SUG Board."

The Task Force also made a general listing of qualifications for the Director's Office:

a. A working knowledge of management principles.
b. Ability to relate to students and the university community on the whole.
c. Must be flexible.
d. Preferable qualities but not necessarily a requirement
1) Experience in an academic community.
2) College degree.
e. Person must be able to deal with an organization in the process of reorganization.
f. High tolerance for ambiguity.

The Search Committee has been budgeted $2500, to be used primarily to fly in top candidates from outside of the state. SUG Board stresses the fact though, that they will equally consider all candidates, including those people in the management staff of the complex who decide to apply for the job.

Notices

A meeting will be held today, to plan a continuation of the non-violent civil disobedience actions at Westover Air Force Base. The meeting will be at 7:30, with theplace to be posted during the day in the S.U. Lobby.

Today's chicken barbecue, originally planned to be held outside in the fields in back of Southwest, has been moved inside due to the weather. This means that the barbecue meal will be served in all Dining Commons.

Best Case Decision Expected By June 5

By ANN GURNETT

The future of Professor Michael Best in the Economics Department will be in limbo until June 5. This is the date when the Executive Committee of the Faculty of Social and Behavioral Sciences, in conjunction with Dean Alfange, must make a recommendation to Vice Chancellor Gluckstern on the subject of overturning the termination of Best's contract by the Personnel Committee of the Economics Dept. The Personnel Committee unanimously voted in April to make Best's contract terminal, arousing a great deal of dissention within the university community.

The issue could possibly go as far as the Governor although that would be highly unlikely. After Dean Alfange and his committee have presented their recommendations to Gluckstern, the Vice Chancellor will make the decision whether to abide by the group's judgments or not. Gluckstern has the power to overturn any decision the committee makes. His decision can, in turn, be overruled by Bromery, and so on up the line.

This is the second year in a row that Best's case has come into the public eye. Normally, a new faculty member is given a period of six years to cultivate his own teaching and research style. During the first year or so of this trial period, the candidate is not pressed to publish as much as are tenured professors. Despite this and the fact that Best has been a member of the Economics Department for less than three years, the reasons being given for the termination of his contract are his competency as a teacher and as an economist, judgments that were reached using publications as a criteria.

Best feels that the Economics Department has provided itself with an "exceedingly narrow definition" of economics. "These self-serving criteria lead to the forgetting of the students," said Best. "National visibility does not ensure quality undergraduate teaching," he continued. "The problem lies in the profession as much as in the people. The profession is in trouble, which is reflected in the extreme here at UMass."

Prof. Simon Rottenburg, Head of the Economics Department, refused to comment on any individual cases, including the Best issue.

Dean Alfange, Dean of Faculty of Social and Behavioral Sciences, also refused to comment specifically on Best's case. Alfange said, however, that he would make his decision, and present it to the Executive Committee who will also make a decision. He stressed the fact that his decision would be made independently and would be subject in no way to decisions made by Vice Chancellor Gluckstern or others involved in the matter.

Best expressed the opinion that Gluckstern is the pressure point in his reappointment. He noted that if Dean Alfange overruled the decision of the Personnel Committee of the Economics Department and Gluckstern bypassed that ruling, the Head of the Economics Dept. would be affronted as well as the Personnel Committee. Best pointed out that it would be difficult for the administration to overrule both the Personnel Committee and the department head.

Possibly the most serious kickback, should Best's reappointment be denied, would be his ability to secure another teaching job, tenured or otherwise. Best was supported in an exclusive interview to the Spark by Paul Sweezy, prominent Marxist economist, editor of Monthly Review, and author of Monopoly Capitalism - "Michael Best is one of the most promising and original of the younger radical political economists. Every economics department should have someone like this, and he is one of the best. It is a depravation, particularly to the students that the University of Massachusetts should make excuses for refusing to renew his contract."

Longshoremen Raise Cut

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Pay Board Monday night cut back pay raises for 50,000 East and Gulf Coast longshoremen, increasing the likelihood of renewed labor unrest on both East and Gulf Coast ports and West Coast ports.

By a vote of 6 to 1 the board rejected the International Longshoremen's Association, AFL—CIO, contracts covering North Atlantic ports, New Orleans and West Gulf ports.

These contracts contained straight-time pay increases of 70 cents an hour in addition to fringe benefits.

The board said it won't approve any more than 55 cents an hour. But it will accept all the fringe benefits won by the union.

This means the board will allow only a 12-per-cent increase in straight-time hourly pay, rather than the 15 per cent negotiated by the union. When both straight-time pay and fringes are figured in, the way the Pay Board judges pay raises, different numbers result for different ports.

G.I. Forces In Thailand Building

BANGKOK (AP)-The U.S. Air Force has built up its forces in Thailand in the last few weeks under a mantle of secrecy that has covered air operations here since 1964.

The withdrawal program which saw U.S. troop strength drop by 15,800 between July 1970 and May 1971 to a level of 32,200 has been reversed.

Informed sources said 2,000 airmen have arrived secretly in Thailand in the last month to handle a new buildup of combat aircraft. Another 3,000 men are due in the near future.

Some are being flown in at night to avoid observation, informants said.

Takhli Air Base, 100 miles north of Bangkok, built at a cost of $18 million by the U.S. government and closed in 1971 as part of the withdrawal program, has been reactivated.

Some 200 American airmen are engaged in bringing the big base back to operational status for use by F4 Phantom fighter-bombers.

Ten squadrons of warplanes including Phantoms and B52s have been ordered to Thailand since the North Vietnamese offensive in South Vietnam began March 30.

Fighter-bombers from Thai bases once more are rolling down "Route Package One," the Air Force code name for the heavily defended Red River Valley in North Vietnam.

Besides Takhli, U.S. airmen in Thailand are stationed at Udorn, Ubon, Nakorn Phanom and Korat, all in the northeast, and at Utapao, 90 miles south of Bangkok. Types of aircraft range from the eight-jet B52s to helicopters and small observation planes.

In the current stepped-up air campaign, Thai-based planes are flying round-the-clock missions.

The B52s have bombed deep into North Vietnam for the first time in the war. Rescue helicopters are again making pickups of downed American fliers far into North Vietnamese territory.

The present buildup has been done quietly. What few announcements there have been have come from Washington, in keeping with the long-standing low-profile policy covering U.S. activities in Thailand.

Less than a week ago, the U.S. mission in Bangkok claimed there were no plans to reactivate Takhli.

Newsmen are not allowed to visit any of the air bases in Thailand. Pilots and GIs have strict instructions not to talk to them.

Although the bases were built by the United States, they remain the property of the royal Thai air force, under an agreement, the terms of which have never been made public.

U.S. Jets Hit Hanoi; Three MIGS Downed

SAIGON (AP)-American planes carried the war to the Hanoi area again Monday, striking at targets the U.S. Command said "are helping to support the Communist invasion" of South Vietnam.

Three Soviet-built MIG fighters were reported shot down in aerial duels with U.S. aircraft, and all the American planes were said to have returned safely.

A Radio Hanoi broadcast claimed two American planes were shot down Monday "west of Hanoi," but did not pinpoint how near the capital.

The U.S. strikes were the first within the reaches of the North Vietnamese capital since April 16 and the second of the 40-day-old North Vietnamese offensive.

According to Radio Hanoi, the strikes around Hanoi followed heavy air strikes over other widely scattered areas of North Vietnam on Sunday, including an attack on irrigation dikes at Nam Dinh, a city in the Red River Delta about 50 miles southeast of the capital. The broadcast made no mention of the damage to the dikes, but said the strikes were deliberate. The U.S. Command in Saigon said dikes were not in the planes' target lists.

Before the 1968 bombing halt by President Lydon B. Johnson, one body of military thought in South Vietnam favored bombing of dikes to cause flooding that could disrupt the movement of war material.

No major new ground action was reported Monday on the scattered fronts in South Vietnam. But enemy pressure remained high and renewed attacks were expected in the central higlands and on the old capital of Hue.

A U.S. headquarters announcement said planes flying from 7th Fleet carriers carried out the strikes against targets about 15 miles west of Hanoi.

The targets included "storage facilities, barracks and training facilities which are helping to support the Communist invasion across the demilitarized zone," the command said. It added that "all U.S. aircraft returned safely from the strikes."

The command announcement said the strikes were made by Navy tacitical aircraft and no B52 bombers were involved. B52s were used April 16 in attacks near the port city of Haiphong and tactical aircraft also hit the Hanoi area. Those raids were described as a one-time action aimed at trying to get Hanoi to halt its offensive.

Since then, however, the North Vietnamese have kept up their drive and one week ago captured Quang Tri, the first provincial capital they have won in the war.

There was no immediate disclosure of how many strikes were flown Monday or how many planes took part. Five carriers with a complement of about 350 planes have been operating recently in Vietnamese coastal areas.

The command said that while the strikes were being made in the Hanoi area "other U.S. aircraft and naval gunfire support strikes were attacking military targets south of the DMZ, in the DMZ and north of the DMZ."

It also was learned that the United States was carrying out a concerted air assault in the southern panhandle of North Vietnam to destroy war material before it could reach forces in the South.

Belgian Jet Hijacked

TEL AVIV (AP)-Three Arabs hijacked a Belgian jetliner before it landed today in Tel Aviv and threatened to blow it up unless Israel releases Arab guerrilla prisoners.

An Israeli army spokesman said the Sabena Airlines 707 had about 90 passenger and 15 crew members on board.

The hijackers used a loudspeaker to shout out their demands to Israeli officials at Lod International Airport outside Tel Aviv. They read off the names of guerrillas they wanted released by the Israelis and said they should be brought to the aircraft. Only then would the passengers be released, the voice on the loudspeaker said.

The hijackers seized control of the plane before it landed at Lod International Airport outside Tel Aviv on a flight from Brussels to Israel via Vienna, Austria.

The number of persons on the plane could not be immediately determined.

Reports said Israel's defense minister, Moshe Dayan, and the military chief of staff, Lt. Gen. David Elazar, were at the airport.

The plane had landed after dark and taxied to a secluded side runway. The hijackers were said to be armed with guns and grenades.

Kennedy Reportedly Supporting McGovern

BOSTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., has been quoted in a Boston Globe interview as saying, "People understand where my sympathies are in this election. They are with Sen. George McGovern and the positions that he takes..."

Kennedy added in a Washington interview with Robert Healy, The Globe's political editor, to be published Tuesday, "I don't think it a preconvention endorsement would make any difference anyway."

Healy said Kennedy made it very clear in the interview that if he really thought it would clearly take him (Kennedy) out of the contest for president once and for all, he would do it.

"But my endorsement would raise as many questions as it would resolve in the short run."

Healy said Kennedy pointed out that an endorsement would mean to some that he was in fact taking himself out of the presidential race but to others it would mean he was setting himself up so that "if McGovern did get tipped over at the convention, Kennedy was positioning himself to take over the McGovern support."

"Doesn't McGovern need support with the blacks and the Chicanos, where you might be helpful?" Kennedy was asked.

"Now that is the kind of thing that I don't think you can do any more," anyone."

Healy wrote that Kennedy was quoted some time ago as saying that President Nixon was unbeatable. Healy said he asked the senator about this.

"No one could really make the argument that President Nixon is unbeatable," Kennedy replied. "What I said was that Nixon could appear to be unbeatable as he has.

"Now, I'm talking about a situation where the President has the China trip, the SALT talks go well for him in Moscow, there is peace in the Middle East, he makes the announcement that he is withdrawing some of our troops from Europe and the Germans are taking over that commitment. At home the economy is improving. Unemployment has stabilized and is moving down. That is when he appears unbeatable.

"Then there is the other argument. The Hubert Humphrey argument. He defeated Humphrey by only 500,000 votes in 1968. Everything was going wrong in the party. The McCarthy people were not participating. Bobby's people were dazed. Humphrey ran what I would call an inadequate campaign. Funding was bad. Then add to that the new registration this year. Then you could say the Democrats could not lose.

"That's what I mean. I never felt that Nixon was unbeatable...

"So this thing goes in cycles. Again, he looks as though he can't miss and then he looks vulnerable."

Senator Hubert Humphrey reaches high to touch a hand during his sidewalk campaign for president in Fort Worth yesterday. (AP)

State Beefs Up Davis Plot Theory

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — An ex-convict testified Monday that Angela Davis and Jonathan Jackson, arriving in a yellow van, visited San Quentin Prison about 24 hours before a deadly Marin County courthouse invasion.

At the prison, on Aug. 6, 1970, young Jackson held a conference with his brother George, another witness testified.

The two prosecution witnesses were called to offer supporting testimony to the state's contention that Miss Davis and Jonathan plotted to free George by taking hostages at the Marin courthouse.

The state says the Aug. 7, 1970, kidnap plan went awry, resulting in the slaying of four persons, including Jonathan Jackson. All were killed inside a yellow van.

The former San Quentin inmate, Louis May, said he was running the visitors' tram from the parking lot to the main entrance when he saw the van drive up. He recognized the two people who got out, he said. "There was Jonathan Jackson and Angela Davis," he continued.

He said he'd seen both of them at the prison before, and pointed to Miss Davis as the prison visitor.

When the couple left, he said, he was close enough to hear their voices from the van as they drove off. He said he heard "argumentative sounds" but couldn't distinguish the words.

The defense immediately attacked Mays' credibility, eliciting on cross-examination that he is a twice- convicted sex offender, with litigation still pending. They implied that he might be seeking help in return for his testimony, in his efforts to have the convictions reversed.

A San Quentin guard, Jack Schotte, said he watched Jonathan visit with his brother that day.

Earlier, the prosecution, detailing Miss Davis' activities before the shootings, tried to prove that she was waiting at San Francisco International Airport to meet the Marin kidnapers after they had taken hostages.

A telephone company security officer testified that a phone number found in slain kidnaper Jonathan Jackson's wallet was that of a public phone next to the American Airline ticket counter at the airport.

Prosecutor Albert Harris, Jr., suggested in his opening statement that Jackson, brother of convict author George Jackson, was to call Miss Davis at that phone in connection with the kidnap plan.

"You don't call a public telephone booth unless you expect someone to be there," he said then.

Jurors were shown color photographs of the pay phone-a wall telephone in an open cubicle. The witness, James Finnegan, testified on cross-examination by the defense that the phone is so close to the American Airlines ticket counter that customers and employees would have a plain view of anyone using it.

Miss Davis, 28, a black militant and former UCLA philosophy teacher, is charged with murder, kidnap and conspiracy in the Marin County escape attempt in which four persons, including Jonathan Jackson, were slain.

Gala Celebration For Bridge

HENNIKER, N.H. (AP) — The New England College campus and this tiny rural community opened today a week long celebration to commemorate the completion of the first authentic covered bridge built in the state since before the turn of the century.

Proclaimed by Gov. Walter Peterson as Covered Bridge Week, the seven-day celebration will be highlighted Saturday by the dedication of the 150-foot New England College - Henniker Bridge.

The rustic span will cross the Contoocook River following a three-day job by a pair of oxen that will start hauling the span across the 130-foot narrows Wednesday.

Built by Milton S. Graton of Ashland, and his son, Arnold, the 90-ton bridge was fashioned from more than 71,000 board feet of timber and took nearly a year to complete.

The week's festivities will be marked by exhibits by many of New Hampshire's notable artists and craftsmen, with daily demonstrations to include weaving, forging, pottery making, stained glass making and sheep shearing. Folk dancing and singing will also be part of the daily programs.

On Friday, a carnival atmosphere will settle over the town of 1,500 when the midway opens with fireworks and a ball.

Saturday a parade will wind its way through town beginning at 11 a.m., and at 9 p.m., the World's Greatest Jazz Band and comedian Henny Youngman will appear in concert.

Dedication ceremonies Saturday begin at 2 p.m., with the governor expected to be joined by Sen. Norris Cotton, R-N.H., Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, D-N.H., Reps. Louis Wyman and James C. Cleveland, both R-N.H. The ceremonies will be followed by the auctioning of 10 sterling silver covered bridge commemorative medals.

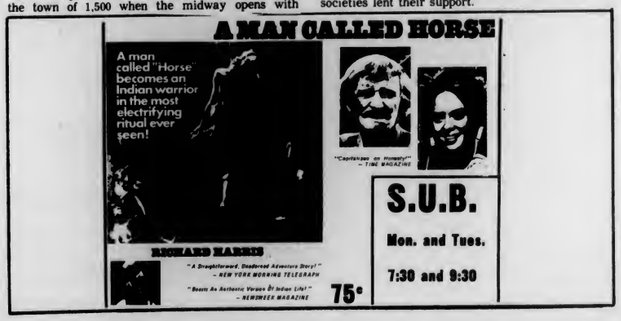
Recognized as the last builder of authentic covered bridges in the country, Graton was brought in by the small four-year liberal arts college in September, 1970, to consult on the possibilities to erecting a covered bridge.

Originally, officials of the 1,100-student college had considered building a covered footbridge to help ease pedestrian traffic across the narrow New Hampshire 114 stone arch bridge connecting the new and old campuses. The footbridge idea was soon scrapped and a more ambitious scheme substituted. Town leaders and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers were also brought in, and various eastern covered bridge societies lent their support.

Italian Fascists Show Strong Gains

ROME (AP) — Italy's resurgent Fascists showed strong gains and the Communists losses early Tuesday in partial returns from the crucial parliamentary elections.

The Christian Democrat party, dominant in Italian politics since the end of World War II, was showing slight gains. The trend indicated a general shift to the right, making a center government a likely result of the election.



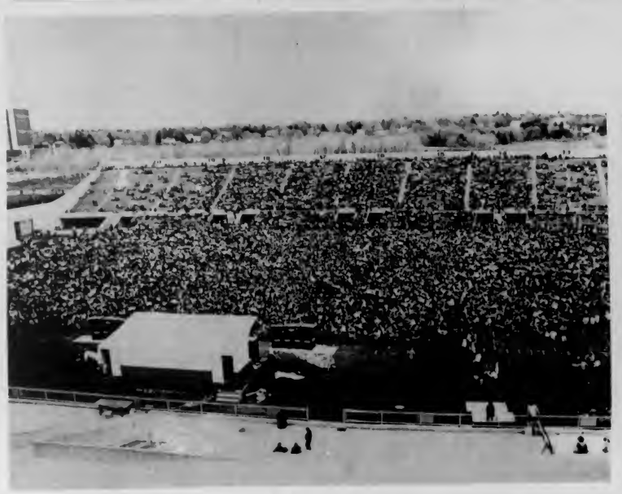
With about half the vote counted in the Senate race, the neo-Fascists had 8.2 per cent, about double their showing in the 1968 election. The Communists and Proletarian Socialists had 28.4 compared to 30 in 1968. The Christian Democrats had 39.4 compared to 38.3 four years ago.

The vote for the 315-seat Senate was being tabulated first. Results for the 615-seat Chamber of Deputies will follow, with a near-final count expected by 8 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

The upsurge of the neo-Fascists was a predicted backlash against political instability, economic decline, strikes and increasing street violence that have plagued Italy for the past two years. It also reflects the disappearance of the small monarchist party.

In some southern communities, including the city of Reggio Calabria on the toe of the Italian boot, the neo-Fascists emerged as the largest party. In Reggio, troubled for months last year by city-wide riots, the party was piling up about 45 per cent of the vote in preliminary results.

But regardless of their success the neo-Fascists have virtually no chance of playing a role in any new government. All other parties have repeatedly stated they would shun any alliance with the party, heir to the regime of dictator Benito Mussolini who led Italy to disaster in World War II.



Sure you heard "Thick as a Brick," NRPS, and Hot Tuna here first. But if you don't like Jethro Tull, Jerry Garcia or Rock Music, you probably won't like us. If you like hearing new albums first, you've found a new summer friend.

All good music, all summer, for the first time.

Trench Fever Tested On Monkeys

BOSTON (AP) — A stubborn disease which may lurk in the bloodstream without making a person ill may yield some secrets to a new test with monkeys, says a Harvard University researcher.

The disease is trench fever, prevalent in some underdeveloped parts of the world, spread by the human body louse.

Prof. J. William Vinson of the Harvard School of Public Health says efforts tofindan answer to the persistent reappearance of the disease have been hampered for lack of laboratory animals that can catch it.

He says a new effort with the owl monkey has succeeded in introducing the rickettsial agent into the monkey's bloodstream so that their body lice became infected.

He says, "The infection was not accompanied by apparent clinical symptoms."

In humans an outbreak of trench fever is marked by a recurring fever, headaches, dizziness and back and leg pains.

It appeared in epidemic form only during the last two world wars.

Vinson reported on developments in the study to a recent meeting of the American Society for Microbiology.

He says trench fever is unique among rickettsial disease in that the germs continue to circulate in the bloodstream for months after the person has been ill.

"Solid immunity apparently fails to develop following natural infection," he says.

He said the germs apparently develop antibodies while in the bloodstream, and checks of an infected monkey showed the level of antibodies rose and fell in proportion to the level of the rickettsial germs.

Vinson said further tests aim to determine why the germs continue to circulate "between man and his body lice in economically deprived populations in many areas of the world."

The other rickettsial germs, carried as parasites by ticks, fleas and lice, cause such diseases as typhus, scrub typhus and Rocky Mountain spotted fever.

Henry S. Commanger Commencement Speaker

Henry Steele Commager, the commencement speaker, and seven other distinguished men and women will be awarded honorary degrees Saturday, May 27, at the 102nd University of Massachusetts Amherst Commencement.

Commencement weekend begins Friday, May 26 with Senior Day, an outdoor barbeque with entertainment in the Northeast uad from noon to 8 p.m.

Admission is by ticket, available through Friday, May 19 at RSO 872, Campus Center, at $1.25 for seniors and $2.50 for non-senior guests.

The Stockbridge School of Agriculture commencement is also on Friday, beginning at 1 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Commencement Day is Saturday, May 27. Robing will begin at 9:30 a.m. with students at the south end of the stadium and faculty members at the stadium facilities building.

The processional will begin at 10. All degree candidates should be in line by 9:45.

In the event of substantial rain, ceremonies will be indoors. The platform party, distinguished guests, Graduate School and College of Arts and Sciences will go to Curry Hicks Cage and all others to Boyden Gym. Admission to these locations is on a first come basis.

Caps and gowns for graduates and undergraduates may be picked up through May 26 at the University Store or at the stadium from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. on Commencement Day.

President Robert Wood will confer graduate and undergraduate degrees and UMass Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery will preside.

Besides Dr. Commager, the internationally known historian from Amherst College, those being honored are Episcopal Bishop John M. Burgess; Holyoke Community College President George E. Frost; the choral conductor and actor Jester Hairston; Dean of Academic Affairs Jacquelyn Anderson Mattfeld of Brown University; former UMass Dean of Physical Education and Athletic Director Warren P. McGuirk; the Nobel Prize-winning economist Paul A. Samuelson; and Henry Bradford Washburn, Jr., director of the Boston Museum of Science.

Dr. Commager is John Woodruff Simpson Lecturer at Amherst College. He has been Pitt Professor of American History at Cambridge University and Harmsworth Professor of American History at Oxford University. A member of the National Academy of Arts and Letters, he served on the War Department's Committee on the History of the War.

Among his publications are "Growth of the American Republic," with Samuel Eliot Morison; "The American Mind," "Freedom and Order," and "The Search for a Usable Past." He is editor of "The Rise of the American Nation," a 50-volume study now in process.

A bishop in the Massachusetts Episcopal Diocese since 1962 and Bishop of the Diocese since 1970, the Rt. Rev. Burgess came to Boston in 1956 as Archdeacon of Boston and superintendent of the Episcopal City Mission. A native of Grand Rapids, Mich., he began his ministry at St. Philip's Church in that city after graduating from the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge. He also holds B.A. and M.A. degrees from the University of Michigan.

Dr. Frost has been president of Holyoke Community College since it was founded in 1964 and before that was the director of Holyoke Junior College, the institution that preceded it, for 18 years. He is a Holyoke native, a graduate of The College of the Holy Cross and holds an M.A. from the Teachers College of Columbia University.

Jester Hairston attended UMass, was graduated from Tufts University in 1928 and received a master's degree from the Juilliard School in 1930. That same year he became assistant conductor of the Hall Johnson Choir and later trained choruses for Andre Kostelanetz, Alfred Wallenstein, Al Jolson, Donald Vorhees and Fred Waring. He went to Hollywood in 1935 and arranged and directed music for such films as "Duel in the Sun," "Portrait of Jenny," "Foxes of Harrow," and "Lilies of the Field." He also acted in the films "To Kill a Mockingbird" and "The Alamo" and for sixteen years played the character LeRoy on the Amos and Andy Show on radio and TV. He has done extensive work with school and church choral groups.

GOP National Convention Moved To Miami

SAN DIEGO (LNS) — Those of you who were all set to truck out to San Diego to greet President Nixon at the Republican Convention in August had better start making plans for a trip to Miami Beach. Rumors have been floating around the country for a couple of weeks, but the Republican National Committee made it official May 5--the Convention is being moved to Miami Beach and is scheduled for August 21.

The Republicans blamed the move on "prohibitive" costs, difficulties in the construction of the Sports Arena that was to house the convention, shortage of hotel space, and other logistical problems.

However, they didn't mention the awkward political atmosphere surrounding the selection of the San Diego convention site which was created by the scandal revealed in Jack Anderson's syndicated column. Anderson broke the story that linked Nixon, San Diego big shots like C. Arnholt Smith, and IT&T in some shady campaign contributions.

IT&T's subsidiary, the Sheraton Hotel chain, agreed to donate $400,000 to the convention fund. This contribution happened to come along just after the Justice Dept. settled favorable to IT&T, an anti-trust case being brought against the huge multi-national corporation. All that adverse publicity is not what Nixon is looking for given the new developments in Vietnam and domestic economic problems.

While there have been some straight press reports that have alluded to Mr. Nixon's embarrassment as a reason for moving the convention, few have raised the issue of what would have happened outside the convention when a predicted one million people gathered to "Evict Nixon."

San Diego had become something of a password among the anti-war and youth movements as well as other activist groups across the country in the past months. The San Diego Coalition--a coalition of anti-war, labor, youth, and third world groups--had been working full time for nearly a year in preparation and it looked as though the demonstrations accompanying the convention would be big, disciplined and directed. The San Diego police had gotten a large grant from the Justice Department to plan their response in advance--with training programs and advanced crowd control equipment.

Miami Beach, Florida, is a different story all together. It is on an island connected to the mainland by only five bridges--which reputedly can be closed off by the police in 54 seconds. Right now there are only the feeblest beginnings of a demonstration preparation group forming--and the psychological buildup that San Diego had will be late in starting for Miami.

All these things seem to make Miami an attractive site for the Republicans to rest their weary bones for what they hope will be a nice sedate convention. Also, the offer of $500,000 in services plus $250,000 to be put up in case by the city will smooth over the ruffled feelings caused by the abrupt change in plans.

But the Republicans shouldn't get their hopes up. People from the San Diego coalition are already making plans to move to Miami and dig in there. And some of the energy from the current spring anti-war offensive in response to Vietnamese victories and Nixon's escalation of the war, is bound to find its way south.

Also, many people were already planning to keep the Democrats company when they chose their man in Miami in July. Lots of them will probably stay over. In fact, the Democrats don't have much to thank the Republicans for. The gift of massive demonstrations confronting a hostile police force is something that splintered party doesn't need.

Nixon said that San Diego was his lucky city. His luck has turned sour, it seems. And as a spokesman for the San Diego Coalition said at a recent news conference, "An elephant can sink in the Atlantic as well as the Pacific!"

Gay Male Liberation Meets Psychologists

BOSTON (LNS) — More than a dozen members of Gay Male Liberation (GML) came to the annual convention of the Eastern Psychologial Association (EPA) at Boston's Sheraton Hotel on April 27 and 28 to challenge the psychologists' role in the oppression of gay people and to present the gathered delegates with four demands. After considerable parliamentary haggling, a vote was taken, and the organization turned down the gay demands by a vote of 221 to 120.

The GML members politely but firmly confronted the psychologists at various seminars, in the corridors, and at a large business meeting, passing out thousands of leaflets, and engaging in conversation with many EPA delegates. Support for the gay demands came primarily from younger EPA delegates, especially those belonging to radical groups such as Science for the People and Psychologists for Social Action.

In their leaflet, the GML members challenged not only clinical psychologists (who have already been frequently criticized for their sexist practices) but experimental psychologists as well. "As experimenters," the leaflet said, "you have traditionally perpetuated oppression by perpetuating oppressive attitudes in your research and by providing data for the forces of oppression."

The leaflet added, "We are opposed to that conception of therapy which assumes that pathology originates in the individual and therefore can be dealt with at a non-political level. Pathology originates in an exploitative economic and sexist social system. The only humane, effective way of dealing with this system is total revolution--the radical restructuring of reality."

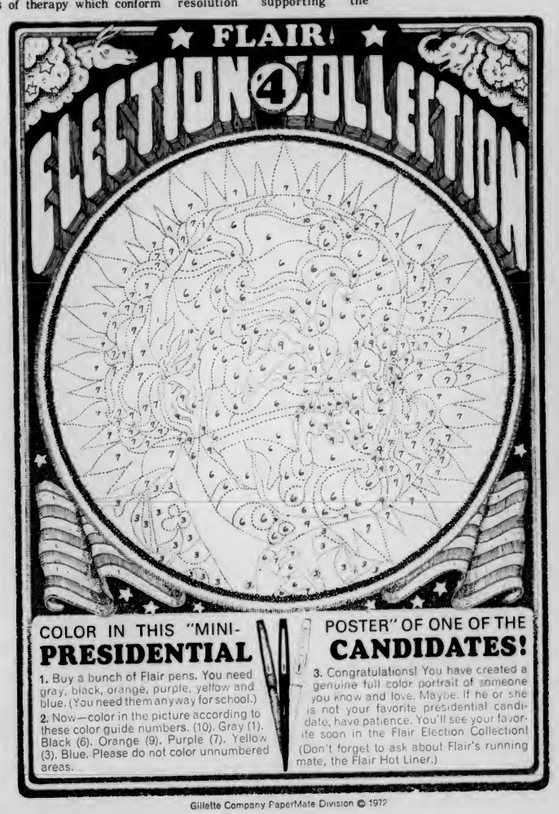
Eric Shumbach, a member of GML, was granted time to present the demands to the assembled delegates in the Sheraton's main ballroom. The demands were:

1. We demand the EPA and other such associations use their influence to put an end to the use of all drugs and experimentation (lobotomies, electro-convulsive shock treatment, castration) developed by psychology as instruments of coercion used on homosexuals and others (3rd world, women, poor) locked in prisons and mental hospitals.

2. We demand an end to similar practices in out-patient therapy.

3. We demand that this EPA convention publicly repudiate all psychological and psychiatric theories, studies and literature which aid in sexist oppression.

4. We demand that members of the EPA and professional community seek forms of counseling in existing institutions which call into question the principles underlying oppressive, sexist attitudes, and forms of therapy which conform more fully to the real needs of all 'patients' involved.



After Shumback made his presentation, a member of the Mental Patients Political Action Committee spoke. He endorsed the GML demands and said that the EPA should provide $1,000 to his group and to GML "to be used for the freeing of our sisters and brothers in the mental hospitals and prisons."

There was scattered applause after the demands were presented. Then several speakers from EPA tried to skirt the issues by complaining about the "poor wording" of the demands and asking whether this was a resolution presented by an EPA member. Several EPA members then offered to sponsor a resolution supporting the demands, and after a very brief discussion a vote was taken, with the demands defeated 221-120. GML members felt that the action was nevertheless worthwhile as the issue of gay oppression had been clearly presented for all EPA members to deal with.

Prior to the gay liberation presentation, anti-war activists within the EPA had presented an anti-war resolution aimed at psychologists working for the military. This resolution was overwhelmingly defeated by a hand vote after the meeting chairman suggested that the EPA, as a "scientific" organization, should not get into "politics."

Interested in interning in Pasadena, California?

The School of Education has formed a partnership with the Pasadena Unified School District. The intent of this partnership was to support the establishment of an alternative school in September, the Pasadena Alternative School opens its doors to 400 students. There is an intense desire to send 30 mature and responsible UMass undergraduate interns to Pasadena to help in this innovative effort. If you are interested, interviews are being held in the School of Ed on Tuesday, May 9th 9:00 - 12:00 & 1:30 - 5:00 in room 227A. Call 5-0936 or 5-0941 for interview.

Nixon Takes

The blockade of the coast of North Vietnam cannot help to bring about world peace. Setting up mines off the coast of a country with little or no naval forces can serve no other means except for the possible death of men and women whom we are not even fighting.

Nixon has again instilled a strong fear into the minds of the Americans. Reactions on campus to his speech indicated that many people feel that within three days we will be into World War III. When was the last time you ever heard of anyone really planning to mine a harbor? Such talk has not been part of public consideration since World War II or Korea.

Our relations with Russia and even with our more obvious allies is jeopardized by Nixon's recent move of mining the coast and bombing the railroads. If Russian ships or ships of the People's Republic of China were sunk by one of our mines, the repercussions would be felt throughout the world.

Obviously a man such as Nixon should not be in the office of the Presidency. Students should do all that they can to see that he is removed. Demonstrate against the war, go to Westover, take part in some of today's anti-war activities, write to Congressmen and Senators, and work for the election of someone who will be much more responsive to the needs of the people.

What The President Knows

WASHINGTON–I guess it would be an understatement to say that things are not going as well in Indochina as the President planned. Most Americans are quite confused about it and are wondering why.

I was, too, until I spoke to my friend Kaminsky in a bar the other night.

Kaminsky raised a frightening thought when he said, "The Americans have always assumed that the President of the United States has information at his disposal that the rest of us don't."

"Of course," I said. "Everyone knows that."

"Well, suppose he doesn't? Suppose the President doesn't know any more about what is going on than we do?"

"That's impossible, Kaminsky," I said. "The President knows secrets that none of us would dream of."

"We like to think that," he replied. "But suppose what he knows is wrong?"

"It can't be wrong. The President has every source of information in this country available to him, from the CIA to the Pentagon, to the embassy in Saigon. Their reports don't lie."

"Well, how do you explain the President's assurances for the past three-and-a-half years that Vietnamization is working?"

"It was working when he said it was working. It just isn't working too well now. You can't expect Vietnamization to work ALL the time."

"But suppose the reports the President read were overly optimistic to make the people in the field look good? How would the President know the truth?"

"No one would do that," I protested. "They know the President relies on that information to make far-reaching decisions."

"True, but have you ever heard of a president getting a PESSIMISTIC report from Indochina?"

"Not until recently," I admitted. "Kaminsky, you are making me very nervous."

"I am not being critical of the President," Kaminsky said. "I don't think President Kennedy or President Johnson received any more honest reports than President Nixon. Maybe that's why we've been in Vietnam for 10 years. Anyone ever stationed in Vietnam has always assured the President in office that things were going well. The only people who didn't believe the reports were those who read the newspapers and watched the war on television.

"The problem with our Presidents is that they refused to believe what they read in the newspapers because the secret reports they received said the exact opposite."

"Then what you're saying, Kaminsky, is that the people who read the newspapers knew more about what was going on in Indochina than the Presidents of the United States?"

"Of course. You must remember that when you're President you trust people who agree with you more than people who disagree with you. Why would a President believe a news story that makes his policy look bad?"

"He wouldn't," I admitted. "Particularly during an election year. But if we can't believe the President knows more than we do, then it takes all the fun out of having a President. I still believe the President has lots of secrets that he isn't telling us."

"Possibly," Kaminsky said. "But you must keep in mind that the fact that something is secret doesn't necessarily make it true, and the fact that something is true doesn't necessarily make it secret."

Kaminsky seemed pleased with himself. "Would you like to buy me another drink?"

"No," I replied.

Symptomatic Treatment

There seems to be an underlying feature existing between these 3 major campus events: (1) the School of Education's recent fiasco (2) the ROTC debate (3) tirades against Adelle Davis.

The resembling texture throughout all 3 experiences is one of moral indignation. Each of these contests bring forth persons thoroughly insenced, indeed, someone arrogantly convinced of their possession of the absolute truth. Taking on the righteous posture produces pride, and pride, y'a know...

I suspect that most misunderstanding is connected to, and possibly produced by misinformation. (Is the collegian, I wonder, big enough to deal with real campus issues-is there a real forum function within its scope of operation?)

What follows is my own highly subjective mini-evaluation of what's happening.

(1) no matter which side you listen to at the School of Ed-what was going on was a power play.

rational: "Moral force can be more or less forceful, but it must have a moral basis, a goal that is just and fair. Raw coercion might work to chang a law or a policy, but only moral force can change people's minds"- Mrs. Martha Pomeroy from a Collegian article entitled "The bars inside our Minds"

(2) if the total campus consciousness was agreed, no one would want to go to ROTC-it would dry up like last year's prunes.

rational: For ROTC to remain: I'm not sure that this campus has a liberally minded atmosphere, full of free thought for potential officers of ROTC to experience. For ROTC to go; I'm not sure that removing the visable sign of the fester of ROTC will remove the fascism.

(3) Adelle is a crusader, and crusaders, whether right or wrong, seem to invite crucifixion.

rational: I do believe that "the most technical sophisticated nation on earth does not have the scientists to create foods with optimum nutrition". I believe that such an important task must be left "to the whims of nature". Science has led us down the old primrose path before.

The above quotes are out of context from a collegian letter to the editor concerning Adelle Davis. I would like to recommend a well documented book called Consumer Beware! by Beatrice Trum Hunter; most particularly the chapter called "Unholy Alliance-Science and the Food Industry".

So I must confess partiality to some of what Adelle has to say. But because there ar altogether too many, well documented conflicting nutritional beliefs, to staunchly sit on on one set of rules and never budge would be folly, and dangerous.

Rather than treat all these campus problems as evils, alien entities, realize they are part of ourselves and have a place in the natural order of things-welcome them as instruments of change.

N.E.A.S.C.U.S. News Release

To the Editor:

The New England Association of School, College and University Staffing condemns the order of University of Massachusetts President Robert C. Wood which bans recruiting from all University of Massachusetts Campuses. This action displays a myopic view of the role and function of the career planning office as well as a total disregard for the needs of the majority of University of Massachusetts students and today's society.

At this time when unemployment at the local and national level has reached record proportions there is a dire need for positive action with more time, more money and additional personnel devoted to the placement office. Their services aid students to obtain meaningful employment rather than add to a nations economic woes by increasing the unemployment level. The action of President Wood is negative in nature and represents a step backward when the situation calls for aggressive action of a positive fashion. One of the goals of the university is to help its students become contributing members of society. Career planning offices are a vital and necessary part of the university services, not only to students but to the nation. Placement services should be expanded rather than restricted or abandoned.

President Wood's order suspending all on-campus recruiting is imprudent and insensitive in that he is responding to the misdirected actions of a small minority and jeopardizing the education of the remaining majority. By not allowing the students their choice of responding in a negative or positive manner to on-campus military recruitment he has imperiled the flow of vital federal funds to the university. he has jeopardized the educational process penalizing the entire student body and threatening additional tax burdens on an already overburdened public.

NEASCUS deplores the order and urges President Wood to study its consequences. He should immediately rescind the order, returning to the students their right to full and complete services of career counseling and placement. The Association further states that it is essential that the services of the career planning office be expanded to meet the challenge of the economic situation facing our nation today.

Passed by unanimous vote at the NEASCUS annual conference May 4, 1972, Bedford. New Hampshire.

Judiciary Appointments

To the Editor:

Judiciary Selections for positions in the student court system were held last week, May 2 & 3. There were 14 openings from all the courts and approximately 47 applications to fill those openings.

The following people have been appointed to the position of justice on the court. To General Court: Larry Smith, Janet Sheppard, and Richard White. To Area East Judiciary: Paul J. Lane. To Non-Residential: Roy Rosenblatt, Rich Geffin. To Greek Area Judiciary: Mike Fox, Laura Nihan, Jean Rakosky.

There are still openings left on General Court and Area West. Within the first six weeks of Fall 1972 semester there will be another selection to try to fill these openings. The more applicants we can interview the better selections we can make. The student court system is not an elitist group. A minority perhaps - no definitely a minority. The type of representation on the Courts is directly effected by those who apply. Your student justices can be an effective body on campus only through participation on your part. Consider how you might serve the judiciaries and plan to apply at the beginning of next semester. A sense of fairness is the most important pre-requisite to be a justice.

A Clarification

To the Editor:

I find it necessary to make a clarification concerning my letter published yesterday. It seems that many of the persons who have been to Westover during the past few weeks have found the conversation of the police quite offensive on the grounds that the police did not act this way. I am well aware of the humanity shown by the Chicopee Police and make no complaint in that respect. Slandering the police was not the point - my point was to expose some of the thoughts that pass through many people's minds when a rare detriment such as arrest becomes a scheduled and organized thing.

Formerly, arrest was made for crimes-now it is a game that police are led to play. When do we bring it together? If the police are really that cool, when are they going to join against the Air Force base and refuse to make arrests? Or must Joe and Archie the policemen remain in their stereotyped roles, either in reality or in the embodiment of "their job"?

As far as the reader is concerned, he has no proof of whether this particular conversation, in part or in total, was real or fictional, and until proof can possibly be made, there is no way of knowing that two such people do not exist on the Chicopee Police Force. This possibility shall remain as subjective as any impression the reader experienced in the letter itself.

You're Welcome

To the Editor:

I wish to thank the Collegian for its blatant misrepresentation of the facts in the article erroneously titled "ROTC Wins on Petition."

ROTC did not win. Nobody won, because of the high number of so-called "non-students" (faculty, staff, graduate students, etc.) who signed the petitions. It would be impossible for the Student Senate to count the student signatures accurately. We can only say that the results are probably about even.

The Collegian made an honest mistake, wholly in consistent with its usual editorial quality.

Right On

To the Editor:

On behalf of the wounded children of Vietnam we want to express our gratitude to the students of UMass who gave such a generous contribution to our hospital in Saigon. Because of you two children will go back to their homes healed and whole, able to walk and run and play.

You may be happy to hear the UMass was only one of nearly a dozen campuses that dedicated part of their Spring activities (whether they were called anti-war actions, moratoriums, or simply spring festivals) to our hospital. Spontaneously from all over the country students wrote to ask how they could help. At Barnard they displayed toys our children had made; at Ball State they showed the film about our hospital; at Queens Community College they held a teach-in; and students at Mt. Holyoke gave us their lunch money for two weeks. We could go on.

This outpouring of love from the students of America to the children of ietnam have moved us greatly and we hope that it will help show the Vietnamese that there are some Americans who do care what happens to them, who are interested in healing, not hurting.

We can't really express how grateful we are. So we'll simply say thank you.

On Behalf Of Best

To the Editor:
Open letter to the Administration:

I am writing on behalf of Professor Michael Best. It is my contention that the Economics Department would be seriously in error were it not to reappoint Mike. Let me explain.

The basis for appointment to a position in the department is, as I understand it, research ability and teaching ability. On both counts I feel that Mike scores favorably and, as regards teaching ability, perhaps the categorization should be outstanding.

As you well know, on the basis of teacher evaluations conducted over the last three years, Mike has always been at or near the top of the department. Let me add my personal evaluation, based on being his student (Latin American Development) and a teaching assistant under him (Economics 125, Fall, 1969). I took ten graduate courses in the department, Latin American Development was among the most interesting, despite the fact that Mike had to contend with a tremendous diversity of economics backgrounds, (one student had been a student of mine in the introductory course the previous semester). It was a credit to his teaching ability that the course was interesting and understandable for the entire spectrum of students.

As his teaching assistant in Econ. 125 I admired his openness, frankness, and interest in his students. His classroom performance certainly made it a great deal easier for me to perform my role as a new teaching assistant.

Whether Professor Best's research is deemed adequate or not (and it appears that the standards of judgment are somewhat ambiguous), I feel his outstanding teaching record is sufficient basis for reappointment. As to his research ability, there are many individuals willing to speak in his behalf. Likewise, I am sure there are those who would speak against it. the point to be gleaned from this is not whether many feel his research is good or bad, for this is simply subjective opinion, but rather the issue that must be discussed is what type of research Mike is doing.

I am sure you are aware that his approach may reasonably be typified as radical. Granted this point, there are two questions that should be asked. 1. Is it good? and 2. Do you want a radical economist? The first queston must be answered by someone well aware of what a good radical economist is. I suggest soliciting the opinions of Paul Sweezy, Joan Robinson, and Howard Wachtel of American University. The second question, again a matter of opinion, I will answer affirmatively. Radical economics is here, it is viable and it is important, important in that it asks questions that conventional economics ignores as outside the realm of economic thinking. It is for this reason that it is imperative that you keep Mike Best.

If you decide, as has the Personnel Committee of the Department of Economics has, that it is not worthwhile to maintain a full spectrum of opinion within the department, then you should not rehire Mike Best. If, however, you feel that the nature of an academic institution is such that that institution has a commitment to the expression of all viewpoints, then you should recommend the rehiring of Professor Michael Best.

Voters, Read This

To the Editor:

Confusion appears to reign once again in the complicated matter of voting and residence. The reasons relate to the newness of on-campus residency and the eighteen-year-old franchise and have nothing to do with the policies of the University or the Town Clerk of Amherst.

Every person who registers to vote in a town is, by that act of registration alone, claiming that town as his "legal residence". As has been pointed out repeatedly by myself and others, this matter of "voting legal residence" is not necessarily effective to change other concepts of residency but it must be adhered to consistently by the registered voter in order for the voter to retain the right to vote.

Annually every town is required to compile a "Street List". Residents (whether voters or not) of the town on January 1 of each year are required to be listed and to indicate their "legal residence." Students who registered to vote in Amherst at the various opportunities almost universally filed to be "Street Listed" properly. Either they neglected to file a Street List card in January or when they filed the card they indicated their former address as their "legal residence". These students are being mailed "drop notices" advising them that they will be dropped from the voter rolls within two weeks. This is a requirement of state law and not anyone's policy regarding students.

Anyone who has registered to vote in Amherst and who has any doubt about retaining that right (if you want to and whether you receive a notice or not) should go to the Town Clerk's office in Amherst Town Hall before taking their summer vacation. They should remember that their legal residence is their voting residence.

Celebration Of Peace And Freedom In Court

By GILBERT J. SALK

I'm going to be in Court tomorrow.

Those of you who've been following the news know that over 400 arrests have been made at Westover AFB in the past two weeks, and more are to come. I've been arrested three times so far, and my Wednesday Court appearance will be to deal with those arrests.

I consider the time in Court to be a celebration of peace and freedom, and I invite you all to join me.

It is a celebration of freedom because we have together confronted and defeated our fear of arrest and imprisonment. We have learned the lessons of Christ, of Gandhi, of King, of the Berrigans. We have learned that to be free we must risk our freedom.

It is a celebration of peace because of the spirit which brought us to trial. We went to Westover to protest the brutal fact of war, to bear witness to our belief that human life is a sacred thing, and that no political expediencies can ever justify the intentional destruction of human life. We chose a method of protest consistent with out beliefs--nonviolence, love, and human concern.

We chose to break a law to demonstrate our concern for a higher law, but we were careful throughout to preserve the humanity of those who disagreed with us, and in the process won some of them over. Many of us are now on a first-name basis with the Chicopee police. We don't regard them as pigs, and they don't see us as unpatriotic, cowardly, or disrespectful. The judge has allowed the singing of peace songs in his courtroom, and he has read to us from The Prophet. Ed Brooke has publicly endorsed our nonviolent civil disobedience. The press has handled our statement with sympathy and understanding. And the continuing, growing, and persistent spirit of peace and brotherhood had begun to capture the eye of the national media. It will spread, hopefully, to other parts of the country.

So it is with a sense of joy that I go to my trial tomorrow. I don't know what the findings will be. It will be a mass trial, and many legal technicalities will be brought into play. That is beyond my control. The judge has seemed a man of compassion and sympathy for what we have been saying. That is part of our success. But at this point I will be unable to express, as the sole basis for my defense, my obedience to a law which supercedes all civil law, a law which places the inviolability of human life above all other considerations.

Thus, if I am found guilty, I will appeal so that I will be able to make my statement in front of a jury. If, ultimately, I am fined, I will refuse to pay it. I do not relish the thought of jail, but I will not buy my way out of it while our society continues to imprison those who cannot afford to pay.

The trial is Wednesday morning at 9:30 in Chicopee District Court, which is located in the Town Hall. You are all invited to celebrate with me and with the rest of my brothers and sisters who are to appear that day. If you need a ride, wait by the flagpoles near Whitmore. If you have a car, please check at the flagpoles before you go, to see if anyone needs a ride.

Come in the spirit of love which brought us to submit to arrest. If you find that the courtroom is too crowded, express your support in song on the outside steps, and share your love with the citizens of Chicopee who walk by. Remember, the enemy is not people who disagree with us, but institutions which dehumanize, or foster the dehumanization of, our brothers and sisters. The enemy is war and the machinery of war, not the men who are forced to bear arms.

And remember, nonviolent civil disobedience continues. The actions are scheduled for every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday morning. On Tuesday and Thursday, meet on the Amherst Common at 6:30 for rides. The action will begin at 7:30 at the Westover Main gate. And on Saturday, meet on the Common at 9:00 for an action beginning at 10:00.

You can get further information by calling the United Christian Foundation (545-2661) or the Valley Peace Center (253-3683). PEACE.

A reminder: For those of you who have forgotten, (because I haven't mentioned it for a while,) both Mother Earth News and the Last Whole Earth Catalog are available in the Draft Counseling office in 923 CC. They make great summer reading.

Women In Slavic Lit.

Tuesday evening, beginning at 7:30 P.M. in Herter 227, the Five-College Slavic Studies program will present a symposium devoted to the subject of women as figures in the literatures and literary traditions of four Slavic-speaking areas. The literatures to be examined are Czech, Slovak, Russian and Yugoslav. The participants will be Maria Banerjee of Smith College, Eva Kucekova of the University of Massachusetts, Jane Raubman of Smith College, and Lorna Peterson, a Ph.D. candidate at Yale. Professor Laszlo Tikos of the University of Massachusetts Department of Slavic Languages will be the moderator. Following the presentation by, and discussions among, the participants, there will be an opportunity for questions and comments from the audience. Admission is free, and everyone is cordially invited to attend.

Hampshire Occupation Over

The Hampshire College science building in Amherst, Massachussets, occupied since 4 a.m. Monday, May 1, was vacated Tuesday, May 2, at 7 p.m. The approximately 35 students in the building were members of the Third World Organization, representing Blacks, Latinos, and Orientals on the campus.

Based on discussions which took place Monday and Tuesday afternoons among student, faculty, and administration representatives, the occupying students felt that sufficient progress had been made so that the building could be reopened while negotiations continued. Nearly all College classes remained in session during the occupation.

Among the points mutually agreed upon by the students and Hampshire College President Charles R. Longsworth were the following:

-a commitment to increased Third World representation in the College's faculty students and staff;

-increased Third World Organization consultation and participation in recruitment of Black, Latino, and Asian faculty, administration, and staff, including an open-access candidates' file, student interviewing, and a prospective employees' letter to be drafted by the Organization;

-increased representation of Third World perspectives in the curriculum.

President Longsworth reiterated his commitment to an affirmative action plan proposed in his "state-of-the-College" address made to a Hampshire symposium last Saturday. More serious attention will be given to hiring faculty and staff more representative of the national population at large.

Remaining for further discussion are proposals by the Third World Organization for a significant increase in the College's Third World student population and an increase in all financial aid, with Third World student participation in financial aid policy-making. Both the Third World Organization and President Longsworth listed these issues as high priorities of the College.

Kremlin Next Stop

Russia-1917 To World War II

EDITOR'S NOTE-Next weekend President Nixon leaves for the second of this year's major summit meetings-a session in Moscow to supplement his February talks with Chinese leaders. What sort of people will Nixon be facing across the Kremlin tables? What are the aims of Soviet foreign policy? These and other questions are discussed in this first of four articles tracing the record from Russia's 1917 revolution through World War II and the cold war.

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

The tip of Moscow's foreign policy iceberg is labeled "peaceful coexistence."

Beneath the surface is a ponderous and potentially dangerous mass.

At the Moscow summit next week President Nixon will deal with a group of aging Soviet leaders who are both Russian and Leninist. Their concepts of world competition have been frozen by 50 years of Leninist ideology.

In 1917, V.I. Lenin, founder of Bolshevism and the Soviet state, said: "Theoretically, it would be absolutely mistaken to forget that every way is merely a continuation of politics by other means."

Interentially, politics then would be a continuation of war by other means.

In 1918, Lenin said: "It is ridiculous...not to know that a treaty is a means of gaining strength." The Soviet record on treaties has been one of pledges made to be broken when breaking them served the national interest.

Since Lenin, Soviet policy has aimed at two basic goals: Security of the Soviet state and expansion of Soviet authority. That policy was swaddled in a tight blanket of tradition. Today it has a look of the era of a century ago, a sort of Victorian diplomacy relying on deception and armed power.

Under Stalin, when Moscow was worried it feigned indifference, as witness the attitude toward the first U.S. atom bomb. When the Kremlin was seriously concerned about one area, it sought to divert attention by focusing on another. When Moscow sought to be subtle it often proved clumsy, resorting to naked force to achieve its ends.

What Stalin could safely take, he took: half of Poland, all three Baltic nations, a piece of Germany, a slice of Romania.

The Stalin strategy of feint and prove, involving retreat when situations became too dangerously hot, carried over to his successors.

When Stalin was resisted in Iran in 1946, after trying to bite off that country's Azerbaijan Province, he pulled back. When the West resisted his attempt to seize isolated West Berlin, he gave up the gamble. Wa-ned off Greece and Turkey by President Harry S. Truman, he backed away.

In terms of dogma, Soviet policy couldn't be wrong in Kremlin eyes because it advanced "progressive" interests of the so-called motherland of socialism. Soviet claims are always "just."

Basically, this has proved a perilous sort of policy, often risking war situations. Stalin ran the risk in Iran and Berlin. Nikita S. Krushchev ran the risk trying to install offensive missiles in Cuba. There is a chronic risk in the powerful Soviet military presence in the Middle East.

Where the policy could safely be made to stick, the Kremlin made it stick. Thus in Hungary in 1956 and Czechoslovakia in 1968, Soviet military forces strangled reform movements and the West did nothing, because to challenge what was happening could have risked major war.

Suspicion is another hallmark of the sort of policy Nixon must confront. For 54 years, deep suspicion has dominated relations between Moscow and Washington. Soviet-American relations were never really good except, perhaps, for a brief period of alliance during World War II.

Stalin called himself Leninist. Khrushchev called himself Leninist. Today's leaders profess to be ardent and faithful followers of all Lenin's doctrines. Toward the United States and "imperialism" they have textbook attitudes.

In the U.S. experience, "anti-imperialist" in a Soviet statement invariably has meant anti-United States.

"Peace and freedom of peoples" has meant the security of the Soviet system and the inviolability of Communist party rule wherever it has been installed.

Ever since the Soviet system began, its leaders have expressed a conviction that the United States wanted to destroy it. Even before World War II ended, Stalin resumed the struggle against what he called imperialism.

Suspicion on the Soviet side is not much less now than it was in the Stalin era and certainly no less than in Khrushchev's time.

The Kremlin has never been hesitant about pushing its own propaganda for revolutionary overthrow of existing regimes around the world, but it violently resents and sternly denounces anything from the other side that it chooses to read as propaganda against Communist rule.

Nixon will find Leonid I. Brezhnev and his colleagues tough bargainers, as were Stalin and Khrushchev before them. This is hardly surprising. All of them were brought up in an atmosphere of rigid adherence to a doctrine which allows almost any means for accomplishing the end.

Inflation Hits Journalism

By TONY GRANITE

INFLATION has also hit the University of Missouri, whose School of Journalism has raised its grade point requirement for incoming students to 2.25, from 2.0, according to The Maneater.

This means the journalists will be either better in quality or fewer in number. Or both.

SPEAKING OF WHICH, we note in the Sidelines newspaper of Middle Tennessee State that the campus Alpha Phi Gamma chapter is hosting a panel discussion titled, "Can A Collegiate Journalist Find Happiness in the Professional Press?"

STILL FURTHER on the collegiate press scene is the intelligence from the Associated Collegiate Press that Nixon and McGovern are running neck and neck in a poll of 91 college editors selected at random.

Although each received 23.1 per cent of the vote, 86.9 of the student editors said they believe Nixon will win the presidency in November.

And although only 2.2 per cent said that Senator Edward Muskie would win the election, 69.3 per cent said he would receive the Democratic nomination.

Breakdown of avowed party affiliations among the editors is 44 per cent "Independents", 40 per cent Democrats, and 16 per cent Republicans.

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK: in the Indiana Daily Student-"Lemonade Stand Has A-Peel."

Phys-Ed Horse Show Coming

The Department of Veterinary and Animal Science, in conjunction with the Phys-Ed department will be sponsoring a student horse-show on May 13.

The show will start at twelve with a performance from the University's all-Morgan Drill-Team. They will also be appearing earlier in a parade celebrating Amherst's 150th birthday.

Only students enrolled in the riding program will be participating.

The show will consist of half game and half equitation classes. Some of the games will be a saddle and bridle race, bareback sit-a-buck, (where the rider places a dollar bill under his thigh and rides until the last bill has been dropped. The winner will be allowed to keep some of the money dropped) and an egg and spoon race (with raw eggs).

The show will be held at Tilson Farm. Tilson Farm is located at the crossroads of North Pleasant St. and the Ditch, once called Eastman Lane. The horse barn is found by walking down to the pink barns with turquoise doors. Once there, the horse barn is the gray building off to the right, across the ditch.

SENIORS REMEMBER!
Senior Day Fri., May 26th
Tickets on sale at RSO office.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Every U.S. President born under Aquarius has died in office. Only one President was born under Gemini- he died in office. More Presidents were born under Scorpio than any other zodiacal sign. Only one President was born on July 4. Both Theodore and Franklin Roosevelt were much interested in astrology. Theodore kept his horoscope mounted on a chessboard in the White House. Franklin presented a child movie star with her horoscope as a birthday gift.

UMass Coaches Get "Dumped"

By MARK VOGLER

It was either sink or swim for the UMass Coaches Association late last week as leading Boyden colleagues were "dumped" in a two-day spectacle by members of the campus community.

The mass uprising occurred on Thursday and Friday at the Campus Center and the coaches were the target of students and professors alike. But fortunately for everybody involved, there was no real firing.

The only replacements that took place in the coaching personnel were for those who called it quits after taking one bucket of water too many. It was all in fun, though. And it went for a good cause–The United Heart Fund.

Sigma Alpha Mu Fraternity was the instigator of the "Bounce for Beats" campaign which capped a charitable week-long drive with all proceeds going to the Heart Fund.

UMass coaching personalities donated their bodies, and anybody who was in the mood for throwing water donated a quarter. It was an expensive fee to pay for shooting a basketball. But those who scored a basket were granted the once in a lifetime opportunity of dousing a coach with a bucket of water at the pull of a string.

The spectators and coaches were kept second guessing as to whether the water would be cold or hot. Here's a "watered down" version of what happened from a few of the coaches who got "dumped":

Head Lacrosse Coach Dick Garber: "I got drowned! All the lacrosse players came down and gave me the business. I put up a few side bets with a couple to give them some incentive. Somebody made the comment that the dunking the coaches took was just like the spring season. I really got the cold water treatment."

Head Football Coach Dick MacPherson: "I think it was a very worthy cause. Some people can go over to Westover and get arrested. But I feel I can accomplish more by going down to the Campus Center and getting doused by cold water for the Heart Fund. That's how I feel."

Head Basketball Coach Jack Leaman: "They were going to shoot the ABA ball. I gave 'em a little hell about that. I wasn't going to let them shoot it (jokingly, of course)."

"Anytime you can have a little fun and make some money for a charitable organization, then I think you're in good shape. My two coaches were sorry that they missed. As a matter of fact, they've signed up for it next year."

Assistant Football Coach George Flood: "My wife got me good. It was frustrating because I couldn't get back at her. Besides it was chilly. They were throwing cold water at me. Coach Pickett paid two dollars to soak Coach Harris."

Assistant Football Coach Bob Harris: "Quack! I feel like a duck. I've had so much water dunked on me, I was in suspense as to whether it would be cold or not. Coach Pickett said he had the range. He made six out of eight shots. I tell ya, he really swamped me. But it was a lot of fun."

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.–SAFE?–Umpire Dick Stello called Ollie Brown of San Diego Padres safe on this force play at home plate in game against the Montreal Expos last week. But Expo catcher John Bocabella appears to have the ball in his glove and his foot on the plate while Brown is a step away. Padres went on to win the game, 3-2, in 14 innings. (AP Wirephoto)

Sharman Has Now Coached Three Championship Teams

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Records set by the Los Angeles Lakers in winning the National Basketball Association championship may sometime be broken, but their coach should hold one for eternity.

Bill Sharman has had champions in three leagues, the now defunct American Basketball League, the American Basketball Association and the NBA.

"The last championship always is sweetest," declared the 45-year-old Sharman.

His Lakers, in their first season under his tutelage, whipped the New York Knicks Sunday night 114-100 for the NBA crown, winning the final play-offs four games to one. They swept four straight after dropping the opener.

"I don't mean to downgrade any of our other coaches," said Jerry West, the superstar guard, but I'm convinced of this: "If we would have had Sharman here before, we would have had a championship before this. Maybe several.

"It's the style of play he initiated on this team."

For Los Angeles, it was the first NBA title since moving West from Minneapolis in 1960 even though on seven previous occasions they had reached the final round.

And West is the last of the players on that 1960-61 team still active with the Lakers.

Sharman installed the run, run, run offense and tight defense he had learned on championship teams at Boston and utilized for titles at Cleveland in the ABL and Utah in the ABA last year. And the NBA finals were no novelty to Bill as a coach. During the 1966-67 season at San Francisco, his Warriors won in the West.

Then the Warriors lost in the finals to Philadelphia which had a 7-foot 1-inch center-Wilt Chamberlain. This time Chamberlain played for the Lakers and despite an injured right wrist, he scored 24 points and led rebounders with 29 in the final game.

Sharman quit the Warriors to join the ABA Los Angeles Stars and led them to the playoffs before the club was moved to Salt Lake City.

Women Softballers Win Two Games

By LESLEE ST. JEAN AND LINDA LANKOWSKI

UMass journeyed to Westfield State on Monday, May 1, and took a 5-2 decision home with them. UMass's batters jumped on Westfield's pitcher for two runs in the first inning when Barb Doucet was driven home by Pat Glispen's triple. Linda Lankowski grounded out to third sending Glispen across the plate with the second run.

An error by Westfield's shortstop in the third inning allowed Glispen to get second and advanced to third on a passed ball. Lankowski followed with a single to drive Glispen home.

With two outs in the fourth, Diane Janvier homered over the centerfield fence for the only run as Debi Stoll and Lynda Larson were left stranded after they had singled.

A single by Glispen with an error on the leftfielder set the tune for the final UMass run. Lankowski's walk and Sue Tyler's hard hit ball which was bobbled by the second baseman allowed Glispen to score.

Lynda Larson went the distance while giving up 8 hits and only two runs which were scored on four straight singles.

Saturday, May 6, UMass hosted Keene State and upped their record to 3-1 (which was also the final score of the game). Beth Fay singled in the second with one out. Debi Stoll then singled and Vicki Pagel was hit by a pitch while attempting to bunt. Barb Doucet then singled to drive in the first run followed by a sacrifice fly by Glispen adding another run.

In the fourth inning, UMass loaded up the bases with one out but they failed to produce any runs. A lead-off single by Sue Tyler in the fifth and a stolen base allowed the UMass nine a chance to get another run. An error by Keene State's third baseman on a sharp line drive by Janvier enabled Tyler to come home from second.

Another uprising with two outs saw Lankowski and Fruzzetti pounding out singles. Tyler followed with another single but Lankowski was thrown out at the plate on a close call.

Vicki Pagel pitched the game allowing four hits, two walks and one run while striking out four. Keene State's only run came in the fourth on a triple into centerfield and then a passed ball sending the runner home.

Frazier Will Fight For $3.5M

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe Frazier, a forbidding monster of a man, was an incongruous figure in pink knit slacks, pink-and-blue checked jacket and black boots, a $20,000 diamond ring glistening from the little finger of his left hand.

That's his bread-and-butter hand–his hooking hand–and bread and butter were on his mind.

"Clay keeps saying he wants $6 million to fight me again–that just don't make sense," the heavyweight champion said as he discussed prospects of a return fight with Muhammad Ali from a leather sofa on the 24th floor of a New York office building.

"If he wants $6 million, what does he think I ought to get–$ 12 million? He don't dictate the terms. Remember I'm champion. I'm the man who calls the signals for the next fight."

In such a position, Frazier was inclined to be generous.

"I'll fight Clay for $3.5 million," he said, still refusing to refer to Ali by his Muslim name. "I don't care what they pay him–$5 million, $10 million. I just want a chance to get him again. And for me– $3.5 million is a nice figure. That's a lot of bread."

Frazier's manager, Yank Durham, said he had agreed to the purse.

"There's no way to make the fight this year," Durham said. "Clay has three fights scheduled. Next year maybe. We're not going to dem..nd the bigger part of the purse. We'll be happy with $3.5 million."

Frazier and Durham were in New York to launch the Yancy Durham Sickle Cell Anemia Foundation and put in some plugs for the champion's fight against Ron Stander May 25 in Omaha, Neb., a large portion of the proceeds of which will go to fight the disease common among blacks. Durham's four-year- old son, Mark, is a victim.

Frazier told a press conference that he is certain Ali will fight him eventually.

The champion said he had watched the last three rounds of the Ali-George Chuvalo fight on television from his fishing boat.

"Clay can't jab any more–he's lost his snap. I'll put him away early next time," he predicted.

Frazier also promised he would have a sensational announcement to make after the Stander fight.

"It'll really be crazy," he vowed.

Retire? He was asked.

"No."

Enter politics?

"No."

Maybe become Muhammad Ali's manager?

"If I did, he'd be better off than he is now," Frazier said.

Netmen YanCon Champs Again

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Last Thursday evening six coaches and two UMass tennis players sat around a conference table trying to figure out how the seedings for the Yankee Conference Tennis Tournament should go.

Then suddenly, John Chapman, the UConn tennis coach, turned to Ted Norris, the URI coach, and leveled his blow. Said Chapman, "Norris, if you don't win with that lineup, you're in trouble," and come Saturday afternoon in the vicinity of 2 p.m. Norris was in trouble as the UMass tennis team came up with a tremendous effort to take the Yankee Conference title, giving Coach Steve Kosakowski his 12th Yan-Con title.

Kowakowski had speculated that the Rams were the favorites, and after viewing the URI lineup, one shuffled beyond recognition, one had to give them the nod. But a team effort in which all eight individuals contributed one or more points gave the title to UMass for the second straight year, a victory that was tremendously satisfying.

The key to the 18 points for UMass (to that of 14 for URI) came Friday, when Kosakowski experienced a Yankee Conference day, "like I've never seen before." All six singles men had made the finals for UMass. All had won two points for the team, and going into Saturday's competition it was 14-8 UMass, and URI needed some kind of performance on day number two.

Saturday morning seemed like duel match for UMass, as all six singles men took the court. Suddenly Kosakowski realized the pleasant dilemma that faced him, to which match should he attend?

Few other teams had quite the problem. The Vermont team members gathered behind the number's one and three singles matches. UConn had only one man in the finals, so all watched the number four man vs. UMass. But UMass had no teammates rooting them on; ah what a shame, they were all out on the court.

mass. But UMass had no teammates rooting them on; ah what a shame, they were all out on the court.

Problems stated to develop though, and it took a great effort by Robert Schpeiser and Mike Phillips (both freshmen) to stave off what could have been an overwhelming Rhody comeback. Schpeiser and Phillips took care of the URI third doubles team in two set fashion to give UMass the mathematical victory.

Schpeiser had been having a good day all around, for after knocking off the URI sixth singles, and then helping to eliminate the URI doubles combo, he became the sole double winner of the conferences by capturing the third doubles crown.

While sending six men into the finals, only two emerged victorious, as Steve Ferber, along with Schpeiser, captured wins at their respective fourth and sixth slots. Ferber downed Larry Kahn of UConn 6-4, 6-4 as he experienced little resistance in his fourth singles flight.

Then there were the upsets, the upsets which were the key to victory for UMass. There was first off Fred Braley's win at number three, which was, in effect, THE turning point of the tournament. Braley beat Billy Nesbitt, the URI captain who had defeated UMass' top man less than two weeks before. If URI's shuffling of the lineup was designed to do anything, it was designed to have Braley beaten. But by winning 6-4, 1-6, 6-4 Braley upset Nesbitt, which upset Norris, which upset the whole URI team.

Gary Ney, one of four freshmen on the championship team, threw in two points of his own at second singles, while Mark Brass at number five lost a three set heartbreaker to Kenny Luba of Rhode Island. Brass had likewise contributed two points to the UMass effort. Chris Coffin aided the Redmen first doubles team as he and Ted Donahue gained a first round victory.

Yes there was Donahue, who was matched against Steve Gorman in a first round first singles match. Gorman of URI fell in two sets, but that was Donahue's prelude; His prelude to knocking off Tom Carey, the number one seed in the tournament. In the list of big upsets, Donahue's followed close behind Braley's.

Kosakowski went way back to February in telling how this team won. "The conditioning was the story. In February and March we ran, and we played indoors, any place that we could. All the kids really worked, running the stairs and working in the cellar corridors in Boyden. We said we were going to repeat that championship in March, and that's just what we did."

Due to a lack of tennis facilities the UMass tennis team found themselves in the most obscure of places in preparation for the season and the conferences, and all their paid off.

"Winning the Yankee Conference is always a big thing for me," said Kosakowski. Well for the players, it likewise was a big thing. With absolutely every team rooting against them, the Redmen reigned superior once again. "That's when you know you're good," pointed out Kosakowski, when everyone is rooting like hell for you to get beat. But there is nothing nicer than having everyone against you, and coming up number one again and again."

Baseball Team Hosts BC

By BILL BALLOU

If past performances are any indication, then the UMass baseball team should be in for a very interesting afternoon today and its fans should be, if anything, entertained.

The reason for the high hopes is simple. Boston College is coming to town.

The Eagles always provide good competition, no matter what the sport, but the baseball scene is usually spiced up a bit by the BC coach, Eddie Pellagrini.

Last year's UMass-BC game, at BC, saw Pellagrini and Dick Bergquist come nose to nose at home plate and involve themselves in a "discussion" of sorts with the home plate umpire. The game itself, whick the Eagles won 7-5, seemed almost secondary to the sometime circus on the field.

This year Pellagrini outdid himself in a game against Providence College when he pulled his team off the field in the middle of a game and forfeited the whole deal. So don't be surprised if their are some fireworks today, above and beyond the normal connotation of the word.

As for the regular type of baseball fireworks, you can expect them too. UMass has been resurging of late after losing two to Maine and playing sloppily but beating a weak Williams team.

After those three rather lacklustre games in a row UMass rapped New Hampshire around rather impressively this past weekend, outscoring them 18-4 and getting a shutout pitching performance from freshman Mike Flanagan.

UMass needed those wins to stay alive in the YanCon as Connecticut keeps winning, but the story as far as the championship and playoff hopes are concerned is still to be written. That will come this weekend.

There were several healthy signs to come out of the big UNH weekend sweep, and most of them concerned the offense.

The attack simply teed off on everyone the Wildcats could throw against them. The two starters, Cormier and Dresser, are both lefthanders, and when you consider that most of the UMass punch this year has been provided by lefthanded hitters, it is a pleasant sign.

One righthand sticker who really belted the ball was Mark Palau, who up to last Friday had a rather anemic .224 batting average with just six RBI's. Not too good for someone who was expected to contribute lots of power to the Red attack.

Palau is now hitting .284 and on Friday alone he almost doubled his RBI total with five as he belted a homer and a triple.

So, if Eddie Pellagrini and friends, the weatherman, and the UMass attack cooperate, there could be more entertainment at Earl Lorden Field than a three ring circus. Game time is 3:30.

The law of averages says it can't rain.

TOM WHITE doesn't look very big in this photo but try looking at him from just 60 feet away. White only lasted 5-1/3 against New Hampshire but Tom Austin bailed him out and Whitey recorded his fourth win of the season. He has lost just one. (MDC photo by Alan Chapman)

Wrestling Captains Named

By JOHN BOCK

"This is the most together team I ever wrestled on and I think that hard work was the key to our success. "With these

"This is the most together team I ever wrestled on and I think that hard work was the key to our success." With these words Senior Captain Shelly Goldberg summed up his feelings for the wrestlers at their recent post season meeting. It was here that awards for the 1972 season were presented and the team captains for next year announced.

For Shelly and teammates Clay Jester, Barry Godowsky, Bruce Buckbee, and Tom Callaghan it was the time to look over the past four years wins, losses, tournaments and a myriad of other things that propelled them to the dominant position in New England wrestling. They had all shared in a first place NEIWA finish and two seconds, plus being the first team in UMass history to beat Springfield College in a dual meet.

Awards can only say a little more than one has done an outstanding job. It was true in this instance and a vote by the team made clear who they felt were deserving of awards. In the category of hardest worker Bruce Buckbee and junior Dave Amato were co-winners. This award represented the fact that the team thought Bruce and Dave had worked harder than anyone else to achieve their goals in wrestling. For Bruce it was a New England Championship at 190 pounds plus a top fifteen finish in the nation. Dave can claim his second Runner-up position in New England at 118.

The Greek award in the words of Coach Barr is "for whatever the team thinks it is. When they vote they might have in mind the guy they think did the best job or was just outstanding in an all around way. "The winner of this award was Bruce Buckbee. The votes were multiplied by the number of points that the man had earned in the year and with his excellent dual match record Bruce won easily. The freshman Greek award was voted to Russ Chateauneuf. Russ won the Varsity New Englands and had a winning dual match season despite injury and weight problems.

A special award was made to Tom Callaghan for his outstanding attitude and devotion to wrestling while at UMass he often overcame or ignored physical handicaps to participate.

The team acting on a suggestion made by Shelly in his fairwell address, voted for two team captains for the season coming. Carl Dambman and Dave Amato will be at the helm next year to guide the team through the roughest dual match schedule wrestled in UMass history.

Carl also received the Most Valuable Wrestler award from the University and the trophy for the Most Pins in the Least Amount of Time at the New England tournament.

Coach Barr made a special announcement concerning the status of the qualifying procedure for future NCAA Championships. UMass along with BC, BU, Brown, UConn, UNH, URI, Maine, Dartmough and Holy Cross have formed a new University Conference that has been awarded an automatic qualifier for the NCAA Championships. At an April meeting of the NCAA Rules Committee, the motion was made and carried to give the New England University Division Conference an automatic qualifier, while reducing to two the number from the Eastern Regional.

Track Tramples Huskies

By EARLE BARROLL

UConn is no longer an unbeaten track team.

For the second straight season, the Huskies left the Llewelyn Derby track in the aftermath of a hard defeat to the UMass track team, 95-81 (UNH had 16 points) Saturday afternoon.

On paper the pre-meet plan to dismantle the Huskies looked pretty good. In actuality, it did the job with plenty to spare. Coach Ken O'Brien explains, "I was hoping that our jumpers could balance off UConn's advantage in the weight throws. We felt that if we could stay close we'd be able to overcome them on the track.

As it turned out Dennis Boisvert (discus) and Jim Queeney (javelin) won their events off-setting firsts by UConn in the hammer and shot. That's one.

Four freshmen, lead by the return to track of basketball star Tom Gillams swept the triple jump. Tom was third in the country last year in the high school ranks. He leaped over 46' in his first competition since. Mike Geharty, Kurt Ellision and Pete Ryan completed the blitz. That's two.

And by the time one and two were added together with a couple of other variables (high jump, long jump and pole vault) UMass was only down by seven. In O'Brien terms, "this was close."

This set the stage for the on-track assault. The first four events of the track program (440 relay, 100 yard dash, mile, 440) were all won by the Redmen which put them ahead for keeps.

The Huskies did come within eight points entering the two-mile run, however a sweep (Randy Thomas, Peter Crisci and Mike McCusker) by UMass put an end to that little aggression.

Ron Evans of UConn was the outstanding athlete in the meet, outscoring the entire UNH team by himself. The runner-up in last week's Penn Relays decathalon took firsts in the pole vault and shot put and seconds in the discus, high jump and long jump.

This afternoon parts of the UMass track team will be at Rhode Island for a dual meet with the Rams. O'Brien terms this meet "an enigma."

"It comes in the wrong place at the wrong time," he said. "I'd rather not see it scheduled at all. The only kids who'll make the trip are those who need work in the peciality areas (sprints, weights). Those who need the training will stay back.

"With the bad weather and the running of two meets all season our training has suffered. So we have to attack this meet like this because we must be ready for the next couple of weeks (Yankee Conference Championship and New Englands)."

Nevertheless, "With the guys we'll be bringing down," O'Brien said, "we should be able to win a close meet."

Nixon Still Hopeful For Soviet Summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — With Moscow silent on the subject, the White House said Tuesday President Nixon hopes his tough sea quarantine of North Vietnam will not derail his planned Soviet summit talks.

Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, the President's assistant for national security affairs, told a White House news conference Nixon realizes his attempt to block arms-carrying Russian ships from Haiphong and other northern ports confronts Soviet leaders with "short-term difficulties."

However, Kissinger said the chief executive still believes the two superpowers are on the verge of forging "a new era in East-West relations" that could be spurred by Nixon's planned May 22-29 visits to Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev.

The first Soviet response came from the official news agency Gass which accused Nixon of "naked aggressive acts" in violation of international law. Tass said nothing about the status of the summit.

Kissinger acknowledged that Nixon's decision to mine approaches to North Vietnamese ports often used by Soviet shipping "of course involves some risk." But he said the administration decided "it did not involve an unacceptable risk."

As for Nixon's order to cut rail lines linking North Vietnam and mainland China--another major route for war supplies--Kissinger discounted the possibility that the Peking government might get edgy.

"We will take great care," he said, "that the People's Republic of China will not misunderstand our intentions."

He spoke before a Peking broadcast reported that two Chinese ships were attacked by U.S. warplanes while anchored in Vietnamese waters.

In another development Tuesday, Secretary of State William P. Rogers indefinitely postponed resumption of a tour of Western European countries interrupted when he was called home for a Monday meeting of the National Security Council that preceded Nixon's latest Vietnam blockbuster.

Rogers had been on an eight-country trip to brief allies on plans for the Moscow summit. Kissinger said the U.S. government has yet to receive any indication from the Soviets as to whether they feel the summit should be held as scheduled.

He surmised a day or so might pass before a reaction is received. Meanwhile, he said the United States is continuing with summit preparations.

The security affairs adviser said the U.S. government in recent months "perhaps underestimated the massive influx of offensive weapons, particularly from the Soviet Union," for use by Hanoi's forces.

These Soviet shipments, he contended, tipped the military balance in Indochina in favor of North Vietnam.

The President's moves, the toughest since America's involvement in Vietnam began, stirred widely scattered anti-war demonstrations.

Stock prices were down in Wall Street and in international money markets gold was up while the dollar was down.

Public response from political figures tended to divide along party lines with the Democrats generally depicting Nixon as engaged in dangerous brinksmanship while Republicans applauded his decisions as wise and necessary.

Senate Democrats, meeting in caucus Tuesday, expressed disapproval of the President's Monday action. The vote was 29 to 14 but it was not disclosed whether the disapproval would be submitted for a vote in the full Senate in the form of a resolution.

The caucus decided unanimously to go ahead with a pending end-the-war amendment and seek a Senate vote as soon as possible.

At the United Nations, Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim appealed to all parties "to act with the utmost restraint."

And he added in a statement that he feels the time has come for using the full machinery of the United Nations to seek a cease-fire and settlement in Vietnam.

In Washington a few dozen protestors were ejected from the House visitors' gallery after chanting anti-war slogans.

As of Tuesday afternoon none of the dozens of demonstrations had produced any significant violence.

Kissinger told reporters he would not expect the sea quarantine to affect the heavy fighting in South Vietnam during the next three weeks. But, after that, there should be some impact if the plan to curtail Hanoi's war goods succeeds, he said.

Kissinger indicated that there are two schools of thought within the administration regarding Soviet involvement in the situation:

—That Moscow conceived, planned and supplied the current Hanoi offensive with the aim of subjecting Nixon to maximum humiliation prior to the planned summit.

—The Soviets did not plan the operation but, because they were the major source of weapons, "must bear part of the responsibility."

Kissinger said, "We tend to lean toward the latter interpretation."

The North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong declared they would fight on against President Nixon's plan to cut off their war supplies from abroad. The official Soviet news agency Tass accused the United States of naked aggression and of violating international law by mining North Vietnam's ports to block military shipments.

Moscow's ambassador to the United Nations, Jacob A. Malik, was the first high Russian official to comment on the new challenge from Washington. Malik told newsmen in New York: "I agree with many American congressmen who condemn the new act of aggression."

Other Communist countries joined in a chorus of denunciations. There was no comment from China on the U.S. mining decision.

REFUGEES FLEE KONTUM--Refugee families sit on their belongings in a military truck as they flee city of Kontum recently, heading south to city of Pleiku in the Central Highlands of South Vietnam. The Kontum area has been threatened by North Vietnamese offensive. Refugees are heading even further south from Pleiku by plan. (AP)

Trustees May Resolve ROTC, Recruitment Today

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

University President Robert Wood said last night that there is a possibility that there will be "specific solutions for specific campuses" at today's Board of Trustees meeting.

According to information the Collegian has received from various sources, separate policies may be set up on recruitment and ROTC for the Amherst and Boston campuses.

According to these sources, it is probable that the UMass Amherst ROTC issue will be settled on this campus without Trustee interference and that two different recruitment policies will be set up for the Boston and Amherst campuses.

Speaking during a telephone interview, Wood said the problem he faces at today's Trustee meeting is conducting the meeting in a way that is constructive despite what Wood termed the "insanity" of the outside world.

Wood was referring to President Nixon's Vietnam policy statement of two nights ago which he said "made me sick."

Asked if he had any plans emanating from Nixon's speech for today's meeting, Wood said he would like to find a way to do something effective, "but I have nothing in mind right now." He said he would decide what he would do, if anything, during the night.

One source, who requested anonymity, said the thinking of the Trustees and Wood was that the University should ideally be devoted to the pursuit of knowledge and be open for a free exchange of ideas. However, the source said, they realized that the University is affected by laws and policy of the U.S. government and changing opinions both on and off the campus.

Proceeding from that premise, the source indicated that the thinking of the Trustees and Wood was that since the ROTC debate was centered around the quality and validity of the ROTC educational program any decision concerning ROTC on those grounds should be made on this campus.

Chancellor Bromery and Provost Gluckstern agree with this recommendation another source said.

It is also probable that ROTC courses taught solely by ROTC personnel will not be given academic credit as of September, 1972.

Concerning on-campus recruitment, sources said that Wood felt that each campus and placement office could decide what policy best fit the needs of its students

However, sources said that Wood stressed the point that the issue was either all or none. That is, all recruitment would either be banned or permitted on-campus.

They indicated that Chancellor Broderick of UMass-Boston wants an off-campus recruitment policy while Chancellor Bromery was in favor of lifting the ban on recruitment for this campus.

The Board of Trustees meeting, to be held today on the 10th floor of the Campus Center, will be open to only one hundred people. Closed circuit television, probably to the Blue Wall, will be provided for those not allowed into the meeting.

Five organizations from this campus will present their views on ROTC and recruitment to the Board today. These are the Faculty Senate, the Marketing Club (on recruitment), The Center for Social Change and the Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC).

The Fac-Sen and the Center for Social Change each will have ten minutes to speak. The Marketing Club and the ROTC cadets will have five minutes. There will also be two represenatives from the Student Government Association present to answer questions from the Trustees.

WMUA will broadcast the meeting live starting at 1 p.m.

Other items on the Board's agenda include government sponsored research on campus; the tuition hike; reports from the Faculty and Educational Policy Committee, the Student Activities Committee, the Buildings and Grounds Committee, the Finance Committee, personnel action at UMass Worcester, and petitions and communications.

Sargent Going To Belchertown

By MDC STAFF

Gov. Sargent will visit the Belchertown State School today, for a one hour tour of the grounds and a series of meetings.

Sargent's visit comes 64 days after he promised UMass students in a speaking engagement on March 7 that he would visit the school within 30 days.

The Governor is expected to arrive at the school at noon and is scheduled to immediately take his hour tour.

Following the tour, Sargent will meet with representatives of various groups involved at the Belchertown School. He is also scheduled to meet with the superintendents of all the state institutions for the retarded.

The press has not been invited to accompany Sargent on the tour, but efforts will be made to change the situation today, said one newsman.

Springfield Union reporter, Jim Shanks, said the press should be on the tour to insure that the tour is not a "whitewash job".

Shanks is the author of the "Tragedy of Belchertown" series. The series which exposed the horrors of Belchertown appeared in the Union two years ago and recently was reprinted in the Collegian.

Joe Sylvia, Students Offering Support Chairman, said that if Sargent refuses to visit K building, he will not consider "the rest of the tour of any value."

Sylvia said the Governor does not plan to visit K building at this time. K building is considered to be one of the back wards of the school and has been the point of much controversy since the printing of the Shanks series on Belchertown.

Strike Meeting

There will be a meeting Wed. night 7:30 in the SU Ballroom to organize and gather support for mass demonstration in Washington which is being planned by a coalition of anti-war groups in New York City. It is called by 5-college area representatives.

WMUA

WMUA will be broadcasting today's Trustee meeting live starting at 1 p.m., on 91.1 FM. This is a very important meeting and all UMass students should listen to it or attend.

Belchertown Parents File "Punishment" Suit

By ROBERT MeDEIROS

A group of parents of Belchertown State School residents have filed a motion in federal court that state Human Services Secretary Peter C. Goldmark be "punished" for contempt of court.

The motion filed late Monday afternoon by Boston Attorney Beryle Cohen charges that Goldmark has "willfully refused and continues to refuse to 'obey' a previous court injunction."

On March 2, 1972, U.S. District Court Judge Francis J.W. Ford, modifying an earlier deadline, ordered Goldmark to make a complete evaluation of the medical needs of each resident at the Belchertown State School by May 1, 1972.

The Monday motion states that Goldmark has failed to complete the evaluations by May 1, and instead, has moved to further change the deadline to July 3, 1972, five months from the day first ordered.

The parents' action stems from a class-action suit filed Feb. 7, 1972 charging that the state Department of Mental Health has been negligent in the care of residents at the Belchertown State School.

Goldmark's office refused to comment on the motion, while Walter Mayo, Assistant Attorney General, said the state would respond to the allegations within 10 days.

UMass Professor Ben Ricci, leading organizer of the suit and the president of the Belchertown Friends Association, said Goldmark "seriously underestimated the power of the courts and the seriousness of the parents to bring about change at the Belchertown School."

"This is a pattern of arrogance," continued Ricci. "These people feel they're beyond the approach of the citizenry."

An informed observer said the future of the motion will depend entirely on the disgression of the court. He said the court will have to decide if the motion warrants civil or criminal legal action.

"If criminal, Goldmark could be committed to prison for contempt of court," he added.

Assistant Attorney General Terence O'Malley in a motion to change the deadline for the completion of the medical evaluations from May 1 to July 3, 1972, stated that the "evaluation procedure has been translated into an effective continuing program at Belchertown State School and extended to all other state schools for the mentally retarded."

Ricci said the amount of medical activity is only "common" to the Belchertown School and there is only a "minimal amount of activity at the other state institutions."

"The emphasis is only at Belchertown because of a court order and even at that Goldmark is dragging his feet," added Ricci.

Ricci said the chronology of events explains Goldmark's refusal to obey the temporary and preliminary injunction.

The motion states: "Only on or about March 6, 1972 approximately 30 days after the preliminary injunction was ordered and after modification of the injunction did Goldmark begin the medical evaluation as ordered."

The motion also states that only 57 per cent of the ordered evaluation were completed on the date set by the court, May 1.

In regards to the work load, the motion says that the "evaluations were not conducted on a daily basis which would have allowed a completion of the court's order, but were instead conducted almost exclusively on weekends."

Ricci said Goldmark's action "denies residents the right to enjoy a new environment for the weekend, because of his refusal to comply with getting the job done during the week."

Poll Reveals Anti Nixon Feelings

By HUGH OWEN

A survey taken yesterday among UMass students revealed that approximately 49 out of 50 students are dissatisfied with the recent escalation of the war in Vietnam by President Nixon.

Most of the students were in agreement that President Nixon has definitely overstepped the bounds of the Presidency by taking action without consulting Congress or the people of the United States. Many felt that the President acted only out of self-interest and did not take into consideration the feelings of the people who he is representing as President of the United States.

Even by taking such drastic action as mining the harbors of North Vietnam many students felt that this would not stop arm shipments from entering North Vietnam. A Vietnam Veteran said that while he was in Vietnam he learned one thing about the North Vietnamese people and that was that they were very determined people and if they need arms from the Soviet Union and China then they would carry the supplies across the border on their backs.

Other students said they thought that China and the Soviet Union would only find ways to get around the blockade in order to bring supplies to North Vietnam and thus defeat President Nixon's strategy.

On the positive side one student expressed his feelings that President Nixon did what he had to in order to protect the remaining U.S. troops in Vietnam. He admitted that President Nixon was taking a big risk by escalating the war and expressed his hope that the gamble would pay off and the Soviet Union and China would back down from President Nixon's move.

As to what Russian and Chinese reaction will be to the President's escalation of the war, students had mixed emotions. Some believed that the Soviet Union and China would not back down from President Nixon and would take any action necessary to protect their interest in Vietnam. Other students felt the two countries would not bother to get involved, that they would just ignore President Nixon's move and continue trading with North Vietnam.

Another student who is also a Vietnam Veteran said that if Kennedy and Johnson were not able to win in Vietnam then Nixon will not be able to either, no matter what action he takes. He felt that the Vietnamese were determined to win in Vietnam and that they would fight until they had driven all United States troops out of Vietnam.

UMass Planning Demo-Strategy

By ROBERT TOUAKE

The University community has planned a number of responses in reaction to President Nixon's intensified military action in Vietnam.

Last night in the Campus Center auditorium, there was a meeting of those concerned with the Westover demonstrations. Gil Salk, one of the participants, said demonstrations at the base will continue to the end of this month.

He added that by the summer community support would hopefully be part of the Westover demonstrations. Salk commented that further demonstrations would follow the basic patterns employed over the past two weeks. That is the base officials and press would be told of any action ahead of time.

Salk also mentioned the possibilities of expanding demonstrations similar to those at Westover to bases in other areas and working with GI's on bases. Concerning the latter, Salk brought up the idea of distributing leaflets among GI's, informing them of their rights.

The Center for Social Change is planning actions in response to Nixon's blockade on North Vietnamese ports. These actions yesterday came in the form of slowing down traffic at the Coolidge Bridge in Hadley in order to leaflet motorists and also distributing leaflets among the people in the area.

Today these actions will continue. The demonstrators will leaflet motorists on a different bridge and again distribute leaflets among the community.

The leaflets include a letter to congressmen supporting actions they may use to bring an immediate end to the bombings and naval blockade of Indochina, and the relation of the war to the economy.

Sources within the Center of Social Change say the reasons for their actions is to educate the people.

The Center urges people to contact them at Munson Hall for more information and to express ideas.

Afternoon Rally Hears Protest Alternatives

By CHARLEY BERKOW

About 200 people at a "mass meeting" in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday heard several planned actions in response to President Nixon's Vietnam announcements of Monday.

Dianne Olson, a spokesperson for the Center for Social Change, said that the meeting was called to inform people about area anti-war activities that they might participate in.

She said that several people called the Center after the President's speech Monday night and asked what actions would be taken locally.

About 60 people who happened to be in Munson Hall Monday night decided that "it would be a sane thing to do" to hold a meeting where everyone could find out about area anti-war activities, according to Olson.

Various speakers at the meeting yesterday afternoon discussed and asked for people to join in:

—Leafletting on the Coolidge Bridge (the bridge over the Connecticut River on Route Nine in Northampton) during the morning rush hour;

—Civil disobedience at Westover Air Force Base Thursday and Saturday;

—Leafletting in area communities; and —Orderly attendance at today's Board of Trustees meeting.

One of the speakers also spoke of a rumored mass demonstration planned for Thursday in Washington, D.C.

The people at yesterday's meeting were asked to attend meetings last night on the particular action they were interested in, to call the Center for Social Change in Munson Hall for more information on planned actions and with ideas for more actions, and to tell other people about them.

Negotiations Breakdown

Bulletin:

Monday night School of Education negotiations were broken off by the Third World Caucus Steering Committee. The impasse was reached over the running of the COP Program. The Committe and a negotiating team from the School of Education were discussing the Committee's five demands, concerning the School of Education.

Dean Dwight Allen of the School said he regretted that negotiations had ended and that he was willing to resume them at any time.

Statements from the Third World Steering Committee and the School of Education negotiators will be released tomorrow.

Anthropology Dept. Reacts To Nixon's War Policy

Anthropology department teachers and students reacted strongly to President Nixon's announcement of military escalation by organizing a full day of activities Tuesday to explore, once again, the issues of American action and to consider how they might increase their effectiveness in opposing the widened war.

In addition to a day-long series of seminars on the war, the group set up a table in the Campus Center to disseminate information on the voting records of Massachusetts Congressmen and to encourage passersby to write immediately to their representatives. By 4 PM, nearly 300 letters had been collected and mailed. This operation will be continued Wednesday.

During an afternoon planning session, students and faculty decided on two courses of action; one to deal with the immediate danger of the President's chosen course of action, the other to establish an on-going organizational framework for political involvement.

For the short term, the group regarded it as tactically imperative to induce Congress, through concerted constituent pressure, to countermand the President's unilateral decision. Immediate actions taken, in addition to the information table mentioned above, included a recording of a statement by Al Hudson to WHYN-TV, laying the groundwork for a public seminar by the department's Southeast Asia specialists to be held before final examinations, collecting money to purchase duplicating supplies, and establishing a communications center for others interested in the anthropologists' activities (214 Machmer Hall; 545-0094).

The major long-range action was to establish a Fall semester course on political action; this would enable students to engage in political activity and receive credit for their work and for their analysis of it. This course will be offered on an experimental basis at the outset. Those interested are urged to contact any faculty member in the anthropology department.

The group strongly supports the efforts of the Center for Social Change and gave a donation to a representative of the Center.

Demonstraters Slow Traffic

About fifty anti-war demonstrators slowed traffic to leaflet cars on Coolidge Bridge in Hadley on Tuesday morning. There were no arrests made by the police.

The demonstrators were mainly University students. They stood in the drizzly rain from about 7:30 a.m. to 9:30 a.m. to distribute anti-war leaflets.

A total of three police cars arrived on the scene at well-spaced intervals. A Hadley cruiser, a State cruiser and finally a Registry car stopped. Police spoke to some demonstrators but no further action was taken.

Traffic was partially blocked by the leafletters on the Hadley side of the Calvin Coolidge Bridge. For much of the leafletting, cars were backed up to the opposite end of the bridge.

Demonstrators carried signs saying such things as: "Stop Bombing." Three demonstrators held wooden bars across the road to stop cars until the drivers had taken a leaflet or read the signs.

U.S. Pounding Of N. Vietnam Continues

SAIGON (AP)-U.S. aircraft and warships struck in North and South Vietnam with the heaviest force in years Tuesday after mining ports in North Vietnam.

A Hanoi broadcast said two U.S. destroyers were set afire by coastal artillery while they shelled the port of Haiphong. There was no confirmation of this from the U.S. Command in Saigon.

President Nguyen Van Thieu went on national radio and television to voice appreciation for President Nixon's decision to try to cut off North Vietnam's war supplies. He predicted South Vietnamese forces soon would win back territory lost in the enemy offensive that began March 30.

Hundreds of U.S. warplanes and a naval task force struck anew at North Vietnam after the mining aimed at strangling its supply lifelines.

A similar campaign was under way in South Vietnam. U.S. warplanes, destroyers and South Vietnamese artillery guns unleashed thousands of bombs and shells across a wide swath of North Vietnamese-held territory on both sides of Highway 1 above the threatened city of Hue in an 18-hour saturation bombardment from the land, air and sea.

Informants said U.S. planes were launching 700 to 800 strikes a day over wide areas of Indochina, including North and South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, with the bulk of the strikes in South Vietnam.

The U.S. Command said Navy planes from three 7th Fleet carriers in the Gulf of Tonkin mined the entrance to Haiphong and at least five other ports and that the initial phases of the operation had been successfully accomplished without any American planes being lost.

The command refused to give further details on grounds it would provide valuable intelligence information to the enemy.

The Navy in Washington issued a formal warning to all shipping that the mine fields at the entrances of seven North Vietnamese ports would be activated at 7 p.m. local time Thursday. It said vessels sailing those waters after that "must do so at their own risk."

At last report, there were 36 ships in Haiphong harbor, about triple the number before the North Vietnamese offensive was launched. Nearly half of the ships are Russian.

In a related development, Communist China claimed that two of its merchant ships at anchor in North Vietnamese waters were "brazenly and repeatedly attacked" by U.S. planes and warships last weekend.

The statement, issued by the Foreign Ministry in Peking said some Chinese crew members and Vietnamese civilians aboard the two ships were wounded and both ships were seriously damaged.

There was no immediate comment from the U.S. Command.

A State Department spokesman in Washington said: "We don't know anything about it."

McGovern Wins Nebraska

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — South Dakota Sen. George McGovern added Nebraska to his list of primary election victories early Wednesday, turning back Minnesota's Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey in presidential balloting among Democrats in this normally conservative heartland state.

Humphrey ran strong in the metropolitan Omaha area, but not strong enough to McGovern's advantage in the remainder of the state.

(AP) — Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey trounced Gov. George C. Wallace in West Virginia's presidential primary Tuesday night, and took a narrow lead over Sen. George S. McGovern in Nebraska.

Humphrey termed his West Virginia triumph magnificent, and sought in Nebraska to make it two in one night and install himself as the front runner for the Democratic nomination.

He said he had gained his West Virginia win by standing up Wallace while "the rest of the candidates ran out."

With 12 per cent of the precincts counted, the situation was:

Humphrey 23,487 votes or 69 per cent.
Wallace 10,788 votes or 31 per cent.

The Nebraska race was a tight one. With 20 per cent of the precincts counted, it stood this way:

Humphrey 16,548 or 38 per cent.
McGovern 15,346 or 35 per cent.
Wallace 6,714 or 15 per cent.
The rest of an 11-candidate field trailed far behind.

The presidential preference contests in both states were advisory, not binding on the national convention delegates, who were being elected separately.

There were 35 delegate votes at stake in West Virginia, where McGovern hoped a volunteer organization and proxy campaigners would help him pick up some convention votes.

Nebraska Democrats elected 22 of their 24 delegates to the Miami Beach convention.

The outcome in those delegate races may not be known for several days. Long, complex ballots slowed the counts.

President Nixon walked away with the Republican primary in Nebraska. There was no GOP contest in West Virginia.

Nixon had 93 per cent of the early vote. Rep. Paul N. McCloskey Jr. of California had 5 per cent and Rep. John M. Ashbrook of Ohio 2 per cent. Neither campaigned actively.

McCloskey, who has dropped out of the presidential race, entered in the first place under the banner of opposition to Nixon's policy in the war in Indochina.

There was no evidence that Nixon's Monday decision to order the mining of North Vietnamese ports had an impact on the balloting. The tiny share drawn by McCloskey was in line with his showings in other states.

South Dakota's McGovern, who came from far back in the early field to share with Humphrey the billing of Democratic leader, had hoped to prove in Nebraska that he could pull votes in relatively conservative state and stand off the former vice president in head-on competition.

Humphrey, who had labor backing there as in West Virginia, accelerated his Nebraska effort after Sens. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine and Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington dropped from active primary competition because of defeats and financial problems.

Soviets Jinx Brandt's Plans

BONN (AP)-Chancellor Willy Brandt reached a compromise with opposition leaders Tuesday for passage of his East-West treaties, but the deal fell through hours later in the face of a negative Soviet reaction.

Rainer Barzel, leader of the opposition Christian Democrats, said his party would oppose the treaties if they came to a parliamentary vote Wednesday as had been planned. A spokesman for Brandt's regime ackowledged "difficulties caused by the Soviet reply."

The Soviet apparently were cool to a Brandt-Barzel deal retreating from the view of the pacts as "a legal basis" for the existing borders of divided Germany until they can be permanently fixed in a World War II peace treaty yet to be negotiated.

Barzel's announcement made an early end unlikely to the 12-day war of nerves in Bonn's deadlocked legislature.

The opposition chief said his party still basically supports the compromise reached with Brandt but needs more time to "reach a sensible decision" on the basis of the Soviet reaction.

The Brandt-Barzel view is that the treaties do not forestall a final border-fixing peace treaty by the four World War II victors and Germany as a whole.

Apparently the big question was whether Moscow thought the Bonn compromise view went too far beyond an earlier Soviet-West German declaration. That left open the possibility of future border changes by mutual consent of the nations involved.

On the fate of Brandt's treaties hangs the timetable for wider East-West moves to relax cold war tension, including implementation of the four power Berlin agreement easing travel restrictions.

Failure to ratify the treaties would becloud further the atmosphere building up to President Nixon's planned trip to Moscow on May 22-already in question after he ordered the mining of North Vietnamese ports.

In Brief...

Gravel Reads Kissinger Papers

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Mike Gravel, D-Alaska, read parts of the secret "Kissinger papers" into the Senate record today to show, he said, the President's decision to mine North Vietnamese waters has been found ineffective.

Sen. Robert Griffin of Michigan, the assistant Republican Leader, listened and said he thought that after six-hours of closed Senate sessions on this subject last week there was an understanding for Gravel to hold off attempting to make public in total the contents of the National Security Council papers prepared in 1969.

Found Alive In Idaho

Idaho (AP)-At least two miners have been found alive and seven dead nearly a mile underground in the Sunshine silver mine, the mine's general manager, Marvin C. Chase, said Tuesday.

Stocks Recover Mild Virility

NEW YORK (AP)-Stock market prices recovered a large part of their steep early losses in later trading today as initial stock waves from President Nixon's decision to mine North Vietnamese ports subsided.

The Dow-Jones average of 30 industrials at 11:30 a.m. EDT was down 5.80 points at 932.04. An hour earlier, the blue-chip indicator had been down nearly 16 points.

All but a handful of issues on the New York Stock and American Stock exchanges were down.

Nixon Viet Decision Under Criticism

DEMONSTRATORS ARRESTED--Police lead away three of some 60 demonstrators taken into custody at the John F. Kennedy Federal Building where 900 to 1,000 anti-war demonstrators sought to bar entrance by sitting in front of the doors. Police officers kept the building open by setting up wooden barricades and formed a double line for workers entering the building. (AP)

BULLETIN:

Two students, one of whom was a reporter, were shot and wounded yesterday during protests against Nixon's war policies at the University of New Mexico. One is listed in serious condition.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Critics called for President Nixon's impeachment Tuesday, denouncing his decision to mine North Vietnamese harbors as "reckless...international lawlessness...high crime...utter madness...flirtation with World War III."

But others of high station in American life saw his action as evidence of "a measured response...a bold move...a courageous move...indefatigable courage."

Some even complained that it was "too little, too late."

Turbulence swirled anew on streets and campuses across the nation as antiwar demonstrators rallied, marched and sat in protest against Nixon's escalation of the Vietnam war.

Demonstrators were escorted from atop the 630-foot St. Louis Gateway Arch, others clashed with United Nations guards in New York. Protest barricades were raised at Syracuse, N.Y. University, and in San Jose, Calif., a fire apparently started by an incendiary device caused $200,000 damage to an Army Reserve station.

Jerry Gordon, coordinator for the National Peace Action Coalition, called for week-long demonstrations, climaxed on Saturday by massive rallies across the country.

Talk of impeachment came from New York's militantly anti-war Democratic congresswoman, Bella Abzug, who labeled Nixon's decision "high crime."

Another New Yorker, Republican Sen. Jacob K. Javits, suggested Congress might cut off military aid to force Nixon to submit his latest Vietnam plan for congressional approval.

Sen. George S. McGovern, pursuing his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination in Nebraska, called the President's action "reckless, unnecessary and unworkable--it is a flirtation with World War III." But he counseled against "damaging demonstrations."

One of McGovern's chief rivals for the nomination, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., left Nebraska to return to Washington to consult congressional leaders about what he called the "serious escalation of the war." He said it places the United States "in unpredictable danger."

On the other hand, Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala., said, "I support the decision of the President," and Sen. Milton Young, R-N.D., called it the route to "a quick and honorable final solution."

Others, like Rep. John Ashbrook, R-Ohio, called Nixon's course of action "too little, too late."

"Had such action been taken six years ago, or four or five years ago," said Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., Ind-Va., "the United States would have been spared many casualities and much anguish. Only time will tell whether such a step will be effective now."

Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., declared: "I hope and pray the President has made the correct decision. But it appears to me that such action is seven or eight years too late."

Chairmen of the two major parties split along predictable lines. Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., saw Nixon's action as "a bold move, a necessary move." His Democratic counterpart, Lawrence F. O'Brien, said Nixon "has established conditions for the ending of this conflict that cannot be accepted by the North Vietnamese."

Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., called the plan "the most reckless act of international lawlessness that any American president has ever committed."

June Draft Call To Hit No. 35

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Selective Service System announced today it would order about 9,000 young men with lottery numbers 1 through 35 to report to the army in June.

The move is aimed at completing a call last March for 15,000 men over the April-May-June period, the draft headquarters said. Only those men with numbers 1 through 15 had been taken until now.

Most of the new inductees will be registrants in classes 1-A and 1-A-O who were born in 1952, but "a small number of older men also will be issued orders," the announcement said.

"These are men who recently have lost deferments or whose initial postponements of induction expire in June."

The new round of orders will be sent out by local boards as soon as possible-and no later than May 31, headquarter said. Recently revised draft regulations require that registrants receive at least 30 days notice of their induction dates.

The April-May-June call represents the first under the new system in which all eligible registrants with the same lottery numbers are ordered to report in the same time period-regardless of their locations around the nation.

Survey Shows U.S. Is "A Drug-Taking Society"

WASHINGTON (AP) — Roughly 1.5 million Americans of high-school age and 700,000 adults say they've tried heroin at least once, a broad new government survey indicates.

This is 6 per cent of all young people aged 12 through 17, and 0.5 per cent of adults 18 and over.

The findings, released Tuesday by the National Commission on marijuana and Drug Abuse, also indicate:

—9.3 million Americans have tried hashish; 10 per cent of young people and 5 per cent of adults.

—4.7 million have tried LSD, peyote or mescalin, 8 per cent of young people and 2 per cent of adults.

—2.6 million have tried cocaine, 5 per cent of young people and 1 per cent of adults.

—3.7 million have tried methamphetamines, or "speed," for non-medical purposes. This is 8 per cent of young people and 2 per cent of adults.

The findings are based on survey of 3,186 Americans conducted for the commission last September and October by Response Analysis Corp. of Princeton, N.J.

Arab Hijackers Slain

TEL AVIV (AP) — Israeli paratroops disguised as mechanics burst into a hijacked Belgian jetliner with blazing guns Tuesday, killed two Arab guerrillas and rescued 97 hostages.

Two women hijackers were captured when 18 combat troops took over the plan after 21 hours of drama at Tel Aviv International Airport.

One of the women was brought out of the plane covered with blood and taken to a hospital for transfusions and emergency surgery. Two soldiers and six passengers were wounded in the assault.

"If other countries acted the way we did, hijackings would stop," said Israel's top military man, Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. David Elazar.

The guerrillas had threatened to blow up the plane and all aboard unless Israel released Arab prisoners.

Passengers said the hijackers took control of the Sabena Boeing 707 jet over Sagreb, Yugoslavia, on Monday after a stop in Vienna, Austria, on a flight from Brussels to Tel Aviv.

Passengers said the men had pistols and detonators and that the women had explosives strapped around their waists.

When the plane landed in Tel Aviv the hijackers demanded that Israel free 100 to 300 Arab guerrilla prisoners and fly them to Cairo in exchange for the lives of those aboard.

Held at gunpoint inside the sweltering plane were 58 men, 28 women, 10 crew members and a 6-year- old traveling alone. Sipping champagne when water ran short, the passengers waited fearfully while Swiss Red Cross officials bargained for their lives.

To approach the plane, the troops concealed their guns beneath white overalls and pretended to be mechanics repairing the jetliner.

The pilot, Capt. Reginald Levy, climbed out of the plane with blood over his hands, but he was smiling.

"Thanks very much. It's a lovely day," he told Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, Elazar and four other generals who stood beside the plane.

Soldiers, passengers and spectators cheered Levy when he reached the airport.

This is the second time the Israelis have killed to stop a hijacking, and the first time Arab hijackers were netted inside Israel. In September 1970 Israeli security guards shot and killed Patrick Arguello, an American who tried to take over an El Al 707 en route from Tel Aviv to New York.

RESEARCH IN MATHEMATICAL SYSTEM THEORY

Automata theory is associated with the study of the logic and mathematics of what computers can and cannot do, what "questions" computers can and cannot "answer". The emphasis of this research is on the mathematic and algebraic theories involved with computer "logic" and how complex they must be. At the same time, the theory of such systems is relevant to other complex and organized growth such as is found in the development of an embryo.

EFFECT OF FOOD EXTRACTS ON RADIATION RESISTANCE OF CLOSTRIDUIM BOTULINUM SPORES

Bacteria will cause the spoilage of canned meat products. However, in food preservation ionizing radiation can be used to kill bacteria without damage to the food product. Unfortunately, clostridium botulinum, which produces a toxin that causes botulism, is resistant to such treatment. On the other hand, certain natural food extracts, for example, garlic, can act as a bacteriocide. This study is seeking a naturally occuring bacteriocide for Cl. botulinum which, coupled with radiation treatment, can be used for the preservation of meat products.

STUDY OF GAS PHASE IGNITION MECHANISMS WITH SKIMMING TRANSIENT MASS SPECTROMETRY

When a chemical compound is ignited, a rapid production of gas occurs. In order to study the movement of the molecules in this expanding gas, that is, the fast kinetics of the reaction, these molecules must be "skimmed" off. Mass spectrometry is a method for studying the molecules in this reaction which takes place in fractions of a second. The investigation is important for a better understanding of fast reactions involved with expanding gases in, for example, an engine where the chemical (gasoline) is ignited by the spark plug.

LOW TEMPERATURE STUDIES ON PROTEINS AND CERTAIN ORGANISMS

Crybrology is the study of living organisms under cold conditions. This research focuses on the metabolism of hibernating insects (carpenter ants and wasps) to study how they are able to survive at low temperatures.

STUDY OF MARINER PHOTOGRAPHY FOR EVIDENCE OF WIND ACTION AND RELATED PHENOMENA ON MARS

Yellow clouds have been observed on Mars. These may be the result of dust storms and would imply that Martian wind has influenced the geologic history of the planet. These clouds have been observed through photographs taken by the Mariner space craft flight around the planet. The research involving the study of these Martian photos, may also be of importance to studies of wind action on the deserts of earth.

BALLOON ASTRONOMY

In order to make certain astronomical measurements, it is advantageous to minimize the influence of the earth's atmosphere. High altitude balloons are used for this task. This research deals with solar radiation and a study of the sun's surrounding envelope, the corona. The study also concerns interplanetary "dust" and the evolution of the solar system.

Stopping Wars

Senator Edward W. Brooke (R-Mass.) has introduced legislation into the Senate which would stop all funding of the Vietnam War after August 31. This is one of the positive moves which our representatives in Washington can make in an effort to see the useless killing of thousands of Americans and Vietnamese come to an end.

While this move is in full agreement with what he said concerning the end of the war on his visit here last Friday, it would seem that it is entirely in conflict with Brooke's announced support of President Nixon's re-election, especially in view of Nixon's recent blockade of the Vietnamese ports and orders to bomb the railroads.

Brooke said that since the North Vietnamese offensive began over a month ago, "we have doubled the number of planes and tripled the number of ships deployed in Indochina." Brooke also stated that the number of "American troops has declined and for that President Nixon should be commended." President Nixon should not be commended until all the killing in Indochina has permanently ceased, and all our military forces have been brought home.

Nixon has not given any firm commitments concerning when the rest of our troops will come home. And now that he has started his new policy, they may never make it.

We urge Brooke to withdraw his support of Nixon until Nixon brings about an end to the killing.

"Chins UP — You're Just As Well Off As You Were Last Month And Last Year"

Mark Mooches Munchies

Students often gripe about the outrageous prices the dining commons charge at UMass for the second rate meals. "It's a ripoff!" they claim. Well it's not if you know how to get your money's worth from the D.C.

"Mooching cures the munchies," the veteran student will tell you. And by following any of the prescribed methods of mooching listed below, there's no reason for going hungry over the weekends or being assessed huge sums for every mouth full of food that you consume.

Probably one of the most primitive and overt techniques used today would be the hit-and-run operation, whereby the student hoards everything in sight and makes a mad dash for the door. The disadvantage that lies in this technique is that it is done openly and it gives the manager time to mobilize his widest waitresses to blockade the door.

It takes a person with excellent speed and pretty good moves to master the hit-and-run. A well-executed head fake does and will make the difference between a clean steal and the embarrassment of being apprehended.

One of the shiftiest schemes which eventually revolutionized the food swiping craft was the tactic employed by hippie hikers–the knapsack. It accommodates a large and variated quantity of food. It's easy to use and is quite the discreet tool of the trade. And even if a D.C. employer becomes suspicious, there's no way you can forfeit your food, unless a search warrant has been secured. But it's recommended that you look before you take, because-

But there are some conservatives who say: "Don't sack it. Bag it, in baggies." These people advocate mooching in moderation. A paper bag is just the thing to suit the needs of the student. Why rip off the whole joint? Take what you need. The advantage here is that minimal theft is more manageable.

Phys Ed majors have modified the bag method by adding the use of a towel to give the culprit the innocent look. A towel bulging with two loaves of bread can easily be mistaken for rolled up gym clothes. To give the operation the locker room odor type of effect, it's suggested that a mildewed towel be used.

Football players have recommended several strategies which have reaped tremendous gains in the past. The most potent operation which can seldomly be defensed, is the safety-in-numbers play. One man carries the food and the rest block. For single-handed jobs bootlegging is widely used. On this play, the moocher holds the food behind his farther hip, thus concealing it from sight. He then jogs nonchalantly to the door.

The con world has left its contributions to mooching by introducing the value of long overcoats with large pockets, hand and duffle bags, and suitcases. Here's where the line "I'm going home after lunch" comes in handy.

Probably the best mooching method of all is to work in the dining commons. The pay isn't good, but there are some fringe benefits. Working inside the kitchen, you should get acquainted with where all the food is kept and all the security precautions that are taken against moochers. You'll get a basic idea of what hours are the safest to mooch and what personnel are the easiest to mooch off. Anyway, who would suspect that an employer would bite the hand that feeds him. Most dining commons workers are entitled a certain number of free meals.

Any of these methods will work well, providing the moocher has complete confidence and gall in what he's doing. Countless books have been written on the subject. But these suggestions are some of the more popular methods. So mooch to your heart's content.

Simple Just Demand?

By JOHN F. DONOVAN

In discussing Ms. Egan's "simple just demand" for elective abortion, there is something to be realized by all sides. Although Ms. Egan glibly skips over the problem as it is a non problem for her, for many the problem of abortion is a question of the women's moral right to choose vs. society's moral right to protect the child in the womb if society so considers the fetus in the womb worthy of the dignity, and worth of the protection usually accorded to human beings. Presented here is an unsolvable problem. For like God, the humanity of the fetus will never be disproven or proven satisfactorily for those involved, and opinions on the matter, after all the debate is through must ultimately find their source in the heart or mind which causes one to take the normative position that it is or it isn't human. My reasons for believing the child in the womb to be part of humanity are just as valid as Ms. Egan's reasons for choosing not to do so. Thus for those who regard the fetus as human, and they do so in the light of centuries of legal and moral tradition, the destruction of the fetus, whether by vacuuming, scraping or saline injection, and whether or not it involves them directly (after all we all are involved in such moral catastrophes as Vietnam, irregardless of one's personal present or involvement there) is a violent destruction of life, and the principles upon which our humanity depends. Obviously those who are not crippled by such a primitive morality, have a different set of standards for judging the 'contents' as one pro-abortion movie nicely put it. The fetus must have a sociological raison d'etre. She or he must first be wanted, must be loved, must be first assured of the quality of life that will surround them. The child's humanity comes when it has fulfilled the minimum requirements set by influential class of affluent America. This does not mean that Ms. Egan's article did not bring up some very important and pressing social problems, but to solve them by abortion is a solution that many look upon with horror.

Therefore I do not find the opposition to abortion surprising. Perhaps Ms. Egan thought that the 'evident justice' of the cause would be so strong as to stifle any opposition. Well obviously it hasn't and the march in New York has proved it. What is more interesting however, is the way in which she deals with those who marched of those who have objections to elective abortion.

First of all, it is evident that not only must a man suppress his moral feelings on the subject (unless he happens to agree), but when he doesn't see fit to keep quiet, his objections are not viewed as that of a human being, a person, but as the objections of a MALE, that mythical super-rapist, so beloved by the Feminist orators, whose only joy in life is to force motherhood on women just for the fun of it.

I suppose that the husband who has to work to support a family, can't possibly understand what the addition of another child means. And of course the priest, even though he might have come from a large family, and seen both his mother and father working hard to survive, could not possibly understand what it means to have children. And what about the man that shares the responsibility for the child out of wedlock that Both have engendered?

I am SICK UNTO DEATH of the stereotyping and myth making that accompanies these types of polemics. I am sick unto death of being pictured as an unfeeling sex driven-machine. My humanity and manhood deserves to be just as free from this type of feminist garbage as your womenhood cries to be from ours. I will not keep quiet on abortion simply because I am a man, because first I am a person, and I object to elective abortion as a human being. Secondly to polarize the abortion issue as a male vs. female issue, is an action based on wishful thinking. There are, believe it or not, women who are against legalized abortion, women who have faced "the torment and constant worry that accompanies any sexual activity," women who "have suffered from having their whole lives determined by the responsibility to care for one child after another."

Finally, the rhetorical use of the word 'reactionary', which on this campus has connotations of being sub-human, is the most beautiful example of how shrewdly political name-calling is used to discredit another's stand. These were not reactionaries who marched in New York, but people of different faiths and opinions, who marched to protest the destruction of life, human life, under a form of which they and all of us have partaken.

Editorial Points

Just think, if you're in North Vietnam now you not only have to worry about bombs being dropped on you, but also you have to worry about tripping over them if you're walking across the water.

In some ways, it was better that last night's outdoor barbecue by the University Food Services was held inside. Altogether, you got less than you would for a normal D.C. meal; but, if it was outside, you probably would not be able to get any milk or coffee. For atmosphere, all you had to do was put up an umbrella to keep the sun off you.

If you see many people walking around campus today wearing different colored arm bands or badges, don't worry, it is just people involved with the Board of Trustees meeting.

Strike A Blow

To the Editor:

In the name of "peace" and "U.S. interests" (sort of a contradiction in terms..) Dick ("the man") Nixon has decided to mine and blockade the North Vietnamese harbors. He's been wanting to strike a decisive blow against the Godless Communist Hordes since long before the speech about his wife's cloth Republican coat. Checkers must be rolling over in his grave with glee.

Apartments Vs. Caves

To the Editor:

Apartment dwellers are facing an annual problem with subletting, August leases, security deposits and renting in the fall. Indeed it seems obvious that for many the problems are certainly not being eased by the landlords, although there are a few exceptions. To help cope with the problems the following guidelines are offered:

Abandoning: If a tenant simply leaves an apartment before the time specified in a lease or other agreement, the tenant is legally liable for the balance of the rent stated to be due. The risk of suit by the Landlord depends upon economic considerations such as amount of security deposit, cost of suit, likelihood of finding the tenant and the tenant's ability to pay. The Landlord cannot legally collect double rent so if the apartment is relet the Tenant's debt is thereby reduced or eliminated and the Landlord may be required to prove that he attempted to relet the apartment (but at Tenant's expense).

Security Deposit: It is specifically not lawful to use a security deposit as the last month's rent unless the Landlord has agreed to such, in writing. Remember, however, that under Massachusetts law the Landlord must refund the security deposit within thirty days of the lawful termination of a tenancy and must justify any withholding of the deposit. If a deposit or any part of it is wrongfully withheld the Landlord is required to pay double that amount back which Small Claims Court can enforce.

Subletting: Subletting or assigning leases usually requires the Landlord's permission. Such agreements should be in writing (I have copies of forms in my office) clearly stating the responsibilities of each party. If there is a charge for such subletting by the Landlord it must be stated in the lease or at least be reasonable in amount related to the cost actually borne by the Landlord.

Fall Renting: There are a vast number (about 900) new apartments in Amherst that should be ready by the Fall not to mention the old ones. The best time to arrange for the fall is now. Whatever place you agree to rent in the fall, get an agreement in writing as to the precise apartment, the rent, the term and the date when it will be ready for you. If the broker can't supply that in writing (for at most a modest charge) I suggest you try elsewhere. If the apartment is not finished or nearly finished now, don't rely on promised completion dates; few have made it in past years. If a complex is supposed to contain extras like pools, tennis courts, air conditioners, etc., insist that they be installed or that you have a written agreement as to how much the rent will be reduced until they are installed. There are enough apartments available in June for rental in September for you to demand this information or go to another complex.

Questions can be made to me by students as always, and by anyone to the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee, Town Hall, Amherst 01002. Don't wait until the last minute when you options may be severely foreclosed.

Dance To The Music

To the Editor:

I have just arrived home from a meeting of some of the people who are very involved and interested in the future of the dance concentration area of the Physical Education Department. Within a relatively short period of time, many things concerning what has been going on or has not been going on in the area of dance at this University were brought to our attention. These I will attempt to relate to you now.

Fourteen years ago, the Women's Physical Education building was built. Because of the cost of the building, expenses were cut from the Department, namely from that aspect called dance.

Six years ago, a very diligent and enthusiastic young woman became the head of the dance concentration area of the Women's Physical Education Department. This person proposed an annex to the Women's Physical Education building to enlarge and improve the dance facilities. This proposal was rejected under the auspices of a lack of funds, but supposedly was put fourth on the list of University building priorities. Since that time, the annex to Bartlett, the Fine Arts building, the Graduate Research Center, the Campus Center, Herter Hall, and the library have been built. It appears to me as if either someone does not know how to count correctly or that the whole issue is being completely ignored.

In these past six years, this same person has continuously tried to enlarge the dance "department" and make it a better one. Most of her proposals have either been ignored, conveniently "misplaced", or rejected. As a result, many of the people in the area of dance concentration have been forced to take classes elsewhere (because of the lack of faculty members and courses given in this University in dance) or have been forced to leave this institution entirely in order to attend a school which can better fulfill their desires and educational needs in this area.

In light of these things and many other underlying incidents, it has become more than obvious that under the Department of Physical Education, the people in the dance concentration area are not receiving what they rightfully deserve, not only in terms of the variety of courses, the number of faculty members (which at present is three), the amount of funds, and the facilities which are available, but also in terms of the number of minds which are receptive to our needs. The students at this University who are interested in dance are the ones who are being affected and hurt by this casual approach to our education.

Because of this and because of the fact that we believe that dance should be considered of a fine art rather than a part of the Physical Education Department, we would very much like to express our desires to seeing dance become an independent major.

We Thank You

To the student body:

On behalf of the Student Senate we would like to thank all who participated in the Spring Concert this past Sunday. Those who attended made our case to the world that students can act in a responsible manner and still enjoy themselves without destroying that act. So for reaffirming our faith in our fellow students, we thank you.

To those who actively participated in the creation of the program we would like to offer our deepest gratitude for without all combined efforts the concert would have surely failed. No one individual group or person can be acclaimed but let us offer our thanks to the Student Senate, the Concert Committee, the Student Activities Staff, the University Security Force, the student marshals, the medics, the Room to Move staff, the SOS volunteers, the cleanup crew, Physical Plant staff and all others who made this production possible.

With the success we have jointly achieved by the trust we nave invested in the student body, we have established a precedent for the future. Indeed, there are things that the community can all be interested in. It gives us satisfaction and appreciation to know that in this world of chaos there are indeed people who can act in peace to achieve a peaceful balance.

Again, thanks to all who made it possible and we hope to do it again next year.

Why Work?

To the Editor:

Once upon a time when a guy (gal) had no visable means of support the system would arrest him, put him to work, feed him, and send him along. That was a bad scene, but the worm has turned, the pendulum has swung and before long we may all swing and I don't mean pleasureably. Dig this; A guy runs up a big bill with me, runs out, I catch him, he gives me a bad check, I go to the cops who send me to civil court, thirty days later I have a judgment against him for what he owes me BUT he owns nothing and has no job, so I can't collect AND I can't touch him unless he gets a steady job plus I now have a lawyers bill to pay. Consider: what if the whole country gave up working and we just took from one another!

When a country gets itself into a state where the advantages of work are not in excess of the disadvantages, fewer and fewer people will work, taxes on those who do work will go up, up, up, and the country will rapidly collapse!!!

Reading Tea Leaves

To the Editor:

"The Tea Party's Birthday Convention....was a flop.... I conclude that local college people, as a body, are not ripe for self-government." Eric Walgren 5/3/72 MDC

I do not agree with Eric Walgren that the failure of the Tea Party is due primarily to the students' unwillingness to get concerned in government. Actually, students are getting more deeply involved in politics and voting than before, as witnessed by the move to oust Nixon and replace him with Smiling George. They are out campaiging and/or voting for candidates that they feel will bring a change for the better in government and in our lives. In the past, radical means for change were tried and failed; now students are working via the ballot to achieve a step towards a better world.

The Tea Party is concerned with issues that should be important to students, that should bring changes towards a healthier community, i.e. rent control, cooperative dorms, stopping University and Town growth. By joining it in mass, the students should surely profit. But few have given the Party support, and as a result it is floundering.

The Party's failure is due mostly to it self and its image. The very name of this political organization, the Tea Party, brings to mind a vision of the Mad Hatter and his cohorts, celebrating in a freaky, circus atmosphere. It sounds as if it would be a group of zanies (led by Eric the Rat?) whose mad, merry purpose is perhaps to elect a pig to the presidency. The group's reason for existing would be to have a great time while ridiculing politics.

The news coverage given to it does not destroy this image but only reinforces its standing as a mock political group. One of its founding meetings was reported very briefly in the MDC-"We had a sauna and a role in the snow to get acquainted." If anything political was discussed, the Collegian obviously decided it wasn't news material and hushed it up. Then the Tea Party got front-page coverage on the MDC the Friday before the convention. It showed a raft on the campus pond sailing the Tea Party banner. Under it was a typical Collegianish comment-saying nothing informative but making a weak attempt at humor. If the Tea Party is indeed a real, earnest political organization, then it seems that someone is trying to keep it a big secret and succeeding at it. Fortunately, the Tea Party's newspaper, "The Tea Table", which I understand is still available through the Tea Party, gives a better picture-one that students would be more apt to support. But with summer vacation almost upon us, very few students will get into this action.

Most students, in my opinion, don't want to support radical, yippie-type movements anymore, as evidenced right here on campus. The Tea Party, exuding this type of madcap image, is folding up. But McGovern's run for the presidency, which is within the confines of organized politics, is finding massive student support. Students are getting down to the cold facts-you've got to change the system from within. So far, the Tea Party hasn't come across with this same viewpoint towards politics. Until it gets a little more serious (or at least gives the facade of being serious), it won't get too much student support.

Hill Residents Need More Security

Results of a study conducted by two UMass students on the attitudes of Orchard Hill residents in regard to dorm security confirmed this week the need for upgrading the security precautions taken at the residential college.

The findings called for a standardization of the precautions in all four dorms on the hill and suggested that a rapport be established among the heads of residence regarding such matters.

"A big part of the responsibility for dorm security depends on the residents themselves. They should be educated and warned what the consequences are for the lack of security. Just by reviewing some of the attitudes indicated in the random sample, it appears that many of the students treat the matter too lightly," the researchers said in a 35-page report.

According to the study, residents displayed considerable neglect for security police within their dorms. The "typcial" resident on the Hill felt that indefinite guests didn't pose any hazard to security and demonstrated no strong impulse to prevent strangers from entering through locked doors. In his eyes there was no need for more security measures.

Yet, while the residents seemed perfectly content with the security measures now taken, well over a quarter of the sample had been victimized by theft–and 75% knew of theft having taken place on their floor.

The researchers urged that large-scale researching be done in the area of dorm security and that it be done campus-wide. They also recommend that a special department be established for the purpose of promoting dorm security and holding accurate records of theft, vandalism, and damage.

The study was conducted by Ed Burk and Mark Vogler, undergraduates who did the researching as part of an English project.

It was coordinated through the security housing office which had helped to devise the questionnaire, and the Orchard Hill Area Coordinator's office which had supplied recent records of dorm damage.

The study showed a strong correlation between records of dorm damage over a five-month period, basic policies of the heads of residence (obtained from interviews), and attitudes of the residents.

Webster and Grayson faired as the dorms on the Hill with the least amount of dorm damage. They ranked as the most secure in regard to the activeness and policies followed through by the heads of residence. These two factors were convincingly linked to the attitudes of the residents, based on available data. In both instances the resident sample was opposed to a more secure dorm.

Field and Dickinson, on the other hand, proved a need for more security precautions. The residents looked for more security precautions in the two dorms. Their dorm damage was tops on the Hill. And the heads of residence were not quite as involved with security as were the heads of residence from Grayson and Webster.

The researchers said that the one-month study had involved 120 randomly selected students on Orchard Hill, 30 from each of the four dorms. It is representative in the sense that a quota of five was established for the six floors examined in each of the residence halls.

The residents who were interviewed were asked to fill out questionnaires and return them on the spot. The researchers reported that only one resident declined to cooperate with them.

Copies of the security study were forwarded to the offices of security housing and the Orchard Hill Area Coordinator. The two student researchers said that they have received favorable feedback from both offices.

Vogler said that he and Burk have attempted to determine the attitudes of Orchard Hill residents by interpreting the available data.

"What Ed and I did with the tabulations was to try and establish the characteristics of the "typical" student on the Hill and the "typical" student in each dorm. We also made an attempt to compare and contrast the attitudes of male and female residents.

"Our final goal was to make some kind of correlation between the attitudes of the residents within each dorm, each head of residence's policy toward dorm security and recent records of dorm damage."

Four Of Harlem Six To Speak

The "Harlem Six", are Wallace Baker, William Craig, Ronald Felder and Walter Thomas, will speak on Thursday, May 11, 1972, at 1:00 p.m. Room 315, New Africa House, and also at 8:00 p.m. S.B.A. Auditorium #120.

The "Harlem Six" were arrested in 1964, and charged with murder in a racist atmosphere and sent to prison. After serving 8 years, and going through 3 trials they were released on bail and are now pending a 4th trial. Daniel Hamm and Ronald Rice are still being held prisoners. It is important that everyone come out and share in what is expected to be an interesting discussion.

The Dominican Order is for men who put their minds where their mouths are.

The Dominican Order is an Order of preachers. But it is an Order of men who base their preaching on intensive contemplation – time spent in study and prayer – so that when they do speak, they have something meaningful to say.

The goal of the Dominicans is the salvation of souls through preaching, but not preaching in just the narrow sense of the pulpit. Rather, it is preaching in the expansive, apostolic sense that uses any channel available to communicate Christ and evangelical truth.

In the Dominican Order, each person is recognized for the uniqueness of his personality while living in Christian Community with others – and sharing his ideas and experiences. Prayer, study and apostolic action are the chief occupations in a Dominican house. They form a unity, because Dominican study is a loving, contemplative study of truth.

The Dominican Order places a premium on developing an individual's ability to accept responsibility. Everyone is given a share in decision-making, from the top to the bottom of the Order's government. Areas of responsibility outside of the Order include: parish work such as counseling and confessionals, retreats, missions, teaching in universities, colleges and high schools, writing, publishing and research.

If you like to think before you speak, perhaps you would like to become a Dominican. For more information, mail the coupon below. Or phone Fr. Quigley or Fr. Gerhard at: (401) 865-2477. A 24-hour answering service is available; you are invited to call collect.

Patricia Warner, a junior Spanish major from Turner's Falls, Mass., tutors at William Whiting Elementary School in Holyoke.

Holyoke Tutorial Program Offered

Any student who has completed Spanish 140 is eligible to sign up for Spanish 385–Holyoke Tutorial (3 credits). It is not necessary to be a Spanish major; there are eight non-majors participating in the program this semester. Students will go to Holyoke twice a week to tutor Puerto-Rican children of elementary, junior high or high school age. Tutoring sessions are conducted on a one-to-one basis, with the content of the tutoring sessions being determined by the specific needs of the tutee involved. In the fall the bus to Holyoke will leave the campus at 8:45 and return about 11:45 A.M., so that students who wish to participate in the program must have these mornings completely free of classes. Tutors generally meet on Friday mornings to discuss any problems that arise or to hear occasional speakers. Students in the tutorial are asked to keep a running journal of their experiences, which then serves as the basis for a final paper.

Any students who are interested in the Tutorial should contact Prof. Nina Scott in the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literatures, 421 Herter Hall (5-0613).

Tot Applications Now Accepted

The University Day School is now accepting applications for the pre-school aged children of UMass students and non-professional staff. The 8-week summer session will run from June 26 until August 18, from 7:30 to 12:30, while the fall semester program will coincide with the university fall semester, with morning and afternoon sessions daily, from 8 to 12 and from 1 to 5.

The Day School is located in Bowditch Lodge, a large house on the southwest corner of campus, where the children are encouraged to participate in a variety of learning experiences, within the structure of the open classroom. The professional staff is supplemented by student teachers so that there is a ratio of one teacher for every four children. Any parent who is interested may visit or call the University Day School at 545-2466.

Faculty Antiwar Group Condemns Nixon Action

President Nixon's decision to mine Haiphong and other harbors in North Vietnam was denounced yesterday by spokesmen of the UMass Faculty and Staff Committee to end the War. They considered the escalation of the war as a new threat to international peace in which the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China might take retaliatory action, and as a shoring up of the hawk faction within those governments. "It is a illusionary to think that the North Vietnamese now would be willing to make major political concessions to the United States. We will continue to insist that the United States stop the support of the Thieu government in Saigon," a spokesman said. "Moreover it is illusionary to believe the Nixon action will interdict military supplies going to the North Vietnamese, who despite intensive bombings in the past have always had adequate military supplies," he added. The group feels thus: the President's escalation serves no useful function except to increase the mounting death toll, the devastation of Southeast Aisa, and the threat of a widening war. They also feel to act militarily in pique and anger will not bring about the necessary preconditions for peace in Vietnam.

Teaching Positions Open

A very limited practice teaching program will be conducted during summer school. Approximately 4 elementary and 6 secondary positions will be available.

This program will be open only to undergraduates who wish certification and who also need the credit for graduation. Priority will be given to students who have met all certification requirements but student teaching. First priority will be given students who plan to complete their studies during Summer, 1972, and second priority to students who plan to graduate Fall, 1972.

All undergraduates interested should plan to attend a meeting Thursday evening, May 11, 1972, in Room 805 of the Campus Center at 7:30 p.m.

The Beginning Of The End

The University Health Services are available for use by students during the summer only if they have paid the summer health fee. Regular services are available to students until after graduation, May 24. In addition, students may be seen for one or two follow-up visits if they are currently under the care of a staff physician or therapist up until June 10.

Students enrolled in summer school must pay the health fee of $16.00.

Students who are not attending summer school but who will be in this area for the summer may pay a health fee of $24.00 if they wish. This would allow them to use the Infirmary during the entire twelve weeks of the summer.

Drug Raids Hit Boston

BOSTON (AP)-Drug raids in seven area communities Monday night and today resulted in 59 arrests and seizure of heroin, marijuana, firearms and counterfeit money, police said today.

The raids were staged by Metropolitan District Commission police and officers from the seven communities: Malden, Everett, Revere, Chelsea, Winthrop, Billerica and the East Boston section of Boston.

Officers said charges ranged from possession of narcotics to sale of narcotics. One of those arrested was picked up earlier on warrants, they said.

Buy Some Books

The League of Women Voters has once again begun preparations for the annual booksale to be held on the 12 and 13 of May on the Town Common.

The sale has been an annual event in Amherst for 23 years. Books of all types and magazines of permanent value, such as National Geographic and Daedalus are donated by local residents and students and are then sorted and priced at bargain rates by League members. Proceeds from the sale are used by the League to help promote informed citizen participation in government.

The booksale gives students a good chance to get rid of unwanted textbooks as well as books of a more general nature. On the other hand, it provides a fine opportunity to buy books for growing libraries at very great savings.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The typical Aries voter is seeking something new. To appeal to Aries, a candidate will have to concentrate on original concepts, daring proposals. The candidate who wins the vote of Aries will be basically independent, aggressive and steadfast. Once the Aries voter makes a decision, it usually sticks. Aries is not fickle. Those who get involved in political arguments are very likely to be born under Aries.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be self-reliant. Promises made by others are not likely to hold water. You gain now by getting to heart of matters. Those who usually are reliable seem to fall apart at seams. Stick to convictions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are going to be finished with burden you should not have carried in first place. Sense of relief is due. Learn to say no. Refuse to become involved with one who constantly sings blues.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Friends argue and try to involve you. Utilize common sense. If you take sides now you will be in position to ultimately lose. Key is to remain aloof without appearing indifferent. Not easy, but necessary.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What appears a setback is merely a test. Trust inner feelings. Shake-up is due in basic position. This will have beneficial effect. You will be out of rut. One who taught you in past will make reappearance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Social activity increases. You go places, meet people and feel gratified. Wonderful change of pace occurs. You may arrive at destination not originally scheduled. Take it in stride.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Preventive measure now can save you time, embarrassment. Protect your image. Be aware of duties, requirements and restrictions. One who is careless may cry on your shoulder. Don't give up something for nothing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Refuse to be rushed. Mate, partner may be out of sorts. You obtain facts, all of which may not be pleasant. Key is to evaluate. Be analytical. Understand legal implications. Ask questions and obtain answers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You get what you need through unusual source. Relative, close neighbor could be involved. Don't attempt to force issues. Be receptive. There is plenty of confusion. This will work to your advantage.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Unorthodox approach spells profit. Your creative ability shines. Check times for appointments. Synchronize moves. Pisces person has information which can open doors previously closed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Element of timing is on your side. Study Sagittarius message. You are designated to handle unique assignement. Let others know that you can be flexible. It is not necessary to take back seat.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Decision is made behind scenes and you are beneficiary. Means circumstances now favor your efforts and aspirations. Be confident. Finish what you start. One you respect seeks your opinion.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Cooperate with Sagittarian. If you provide data, you will be repaid. Discussion of finances is on agenda. Take initiative. Realize you have something of value to offer. Generous offer will be received.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic, stubborn, an original thinker. You have undergone some emotional bruises. They will heal later in year. Recent losses can be recouped. October could be the most significant month of 1972 for you.

Durham Says No Rematch

MARGATE, N.J. (AP) — Yancey Durham, manager of world heavyweight champion Joe Frazier, says there isn't going to be return fight with Muhammad Ali this year.

"Never mind what Jack Kent Cooke or anybody else says, there isn't going to be a return this year," Durham insisted at the champ's training camp here.

Cooke, owner of basketball's Los Angeles Lakers and hockey's Los Angeles Kings, promoted the first Frazier-Ali fight and has an option for the rematch. He wants to hold it in the Forum, which he owns, in Inglewood, Calif.

"Even before the first fight I had it in mind that if there would be a rematch, it wouldn't be held until 1973," said Durham.

Frazier is training for his May 25 defense against Ron Stander in Omaha, Neb. The champion has pledged half his share of the purse to the Yancey Durham Sickle Cell Anemia Foundation. Durham is giving his entire 15 per cent and the promotion is contributing 10 per cent to the cause.

Durham confirmed that Cooke has a two-year option to promote the Frazier-Ali rematch, but said, "there are two or three things in the contract I think I can use to break it--I'd have to go to the courts on that."

Durham said he has not ruled out Madison Square Garden as the site of the next Frazier-Ali bout, despite the fact that the New York State income tax took a big chunk out of the fighters' $2.5 million purses for the March 8, 1971, fight--nearly $350,000 each.

We might fight in New York, but the Astrodome and the new 20,000-seat hall they're building in Atlanta might also be the place."

Durham ruled out Cooke's Inglewood Forum.

Frazier talked a little about how much each fighter should get for the rematch.

"Clay (Frazier refuses to use Ali), keeps saying he wants six million to fight me again," said the champ. "That just doesn't make sense. If he wants that much, what does he think I ought to get, 12 million? Remember, I'm the champion. I'll fight him for 3-1/2 million and I don't care what they pay him."

Frazier disposed of Terry Daniels in New Orleans last Jan. 15 for his 25th knockout in an all-victorious career of 28 professional fights.

Durham defended fighting such opponents as Daniels and Stander when he said, "There's no point in taking on our leftovers a second time, like Jimmy Ellis, Buster Mathis, George Chuvalo and the next guy Clay's fighting, Jerry Quarry. We knocked them all out already. Clay can have them."

Speaking of the Rangers....if they lose, that means all we have to look forward to is the Red Sox. (Come on, Brad Park.)

Jerry West finally made it...thanks, Bill Sharman.

Baseball Rained Out Again

By BILL BALLOU

You're going to have to wait until the Fourth of July to get your yearly dose of fireworks, because Boston College is not coming to town.

It rained yesterday (we keep abreast of all major developments) and the rain dictated the cancellation of the scheduled BC-UMass encounter. Since it isn't a Conference game it won't be made up at this late stage of the season. That the Eagles won't be visiting Amherst is a shame, because Eddie Pellagrini is usually good for a chuckle or two. So if Eddie's still around then we'll see him in two years.

Baseball-wise, it's too bad that the game won't be played, at least from the UMass viewpoint, since the Redmen have some key games coming up this weekend and need the exercise.

Dick Bergquist definitely would have liked to play. "I really wish we could have played," he said. "First of all because we just like to play BC, but most important is that our pitchers could have used the work."

With a staff as deep as this one it's pretty tough sometimes to give all your arms as much work as they need. Especially with the weather wreaking havoc with the schedule.

And the do or die situation that UMass is heading into makes it imperative that every arm on the squad be ready. There will be no holds barred against UConn.

Regardless, there's still one non-conference game to be played before the weekend, and that's Thursday's Springfield contest. The Chiefs are headed for the College Division playoffs for something like the sixth straight year so they promise to give a good test to the Redmen staff.

Bergquist also mentioned something about Tom Austin and the work situation, and that seems a perfect cue to do some typewriter work about the big reliever.

Austin has been the unsung hero of this highly touted UMass staff, coming on in practically every conceivable situation to stop practically every conceivable threat. In a role that doesn't allow for mistakes, Austin has made practically none. It's high time he got some ink.

The only performance of his that I really wasn't impressed with was his start against AIC back toward the beginning of the year. He gutted it out for five innings and got the win, but it seemed he just wasn't comfortable. Maybe it was the unfamiliar role, or maybe it was the 30 mph wind, but it was not a typical Austin performance.

More typical was his most recent work against New Hampshire. He came on in the fifth inning to save Tom White's skin in a game that was 7-4 at the time and could have ended up in basketbal figures the way things were going.

That particular performance pointed out the big guy's biggest asset as a reliever--control. He doesn't appear to overpower the batter, but in a tight spot he can throw strikes.

Probably the most familiar scene of the season for UMass baseball fans is that of a big blonde head popping out of the dugout and loping down along the third base line with Bill Ryan to do some throwing.

Stickmen Face Amherst

This afternoon at 3:00 o'clock the UMass lacrosse team will finally get around to playing the Amherst College Lord Jeffs in the Gorilla's last road game of the season.

Amherst has improved a great deal since last year, when UMass annihilated them, 12-2. They have played seven games thus far this year, losing only one game, to Middlebury, 7-5. The Lord Jeff's defense looks like it's a real strong unit, as no team has scored more than seven goals in one game against them. Their victories have been at the expense of Bowdoin (10-4), Wesleyan (10-3), Trinity (13-1), Tufts (11-4), Springfield (9-4), and MIT (13-4). All told, Amherst has allowed an average of less than four goals per game.

A few of the outstanding players to watch this afternoon are captain and attackman Petrie Peters, the team's high scorer. Crease man on the same line, an all-senior unit, is Dennis Coffey. Harry Hinckley rounds out the first attack.

Amherst runs three midfield units with the number one line manned by Tom Black, Jeff Chapman, and Linus Salakian. All three men are very good scorers.

In speaking about today's game Coach Garber expressed a little apprehension about playing the Lord Jeffs.

"We've beaten them the last two years we've played them--they'll be rough this year, because they use a zone defense, something we haven't really seen before. We've been scoring well, but giving up a few too many goals ourselves."

Today's game is especially important for two reasons--if the Redmen win, they'll just about cinch a spot in the post-season USILA tournament; and it represents the second-to-last opportunity this season for Charlie Hardy to cut into Tom Malone's all-time UMass one season lacrosse scoring record of 84 points. Hardy has 70 points. See ya there.

Bruins Blow It!

BOSTON (AP)-Shifty Bobby Rousseau, scoreless in his last 22 games against Boston, connected for apair of third period goals Tuesday night and rallied the New York Rangers to a 3-2 victory in the fifth game of their National Hockey League Stanley Cup championship series against the Bruins.

The victory left the Rangers trailing the best-of-seven series 3-2, with game six scheduled for Thursday night in New York.

With the treasured Stanley Cup waiting to be presented, the Bruins carried a 2-1 lead into the final 20 minutes as they tried for the clincher on their home ice. But the Rangers, who skated 89 seconds near the end of the second period with two men in the penalty box, would not be denied.

Rousseau tied the score at 2:56 when his shot dribbled through the pads of goalie Ed Johnston, who played another brilliant game in the Boston nets.

With the score tied both teams had excellent opportunities but Johnston and New York goalie Gilles Villemure stood off the threats. Then, at 12:45, Rousseau struck again.

The Bruins lifted Johnston with 63 seconds remaining, but Villemure held off the assault.

Joe Rodgers, Swimming Coach, presents an Olympic preview at today's Varsity M Club Luncheon. The luncheon starts at 12:00 P.M. and will be over at 1:15 P.M. Price of tickets is $1.50, public is invited.

Ray Wilson

Dedicated Recruiter

By EARLE BARROLL

He operates in a world of intense reality where his home covers the eastern United States from Maine to Pennsylvania and his neighbors go under the names of North Carolina, St. John's, Duke and Ohio State.

And yet to the average UMass basketball fan his name remains in obscurity. The odds are better of finding him at a local gas station somewhere in New Jersey than on a bench next to Jack Leaman.

His cameo appearances at his basketball office desk are as frequent as good weather has been this spring. His bloodshot eyes are a tribute of his dedication to a basketball program.

This says a lot about the man...Ray Wilson.

As the chief recruiter and assistant coach for UMass basketball he's on the road from October to May scouring and digging basketball hotbeds for potential talent to bring to the university.

It's not an easy life.

"It's frustrating as hell," Wilson says. "To get into competition with those guys (Duke, No. Carolina, etc.) you have to come to a realistic decision, if they want to same top kid we're after, and ask ourselves 'Is it too expensive to continue recruiting in terms of time and money. Do we stay or do we pull away and go for a number two kid?'."

Wilson took over this position when Peter Broaca moved on to Coast Guard as head coach last year and Jack Leaman has no reservations about it. "He handles the entire recruiting program," Leaman says. "He tells both coach Gaudette and myself what he has seen and what we have to do.

"He's made an outstanding image for the university in his travels and is probably one of the most popular coaches with the kids. He balances off the head coach pretty well."

Leaman and Wilson met on a basketball court at Boston University. Wilson was a senior back in the late fifties for the Terriors, Leaman a freshman. Due to a small gym both squads practiced against each other and according to Leaman, "He guarded me for one year and beat the living day lights out of me."

It was probably due to a young man who Wilson coached at Roosevelt High, L.I., by the name of Julius Erving that the UMass basketball program and Wilson were thrust into the mainstream of big-time college recruiting.

"Because of him doors are now open that have never been before," Wilson explains. "But these doors are the doors of the real blue-chippers and now the factor becomes do you want to play before 5,000 or 15,000 people."

Two trips to the National Invitational Tournament have also played ahand in allowing UMass to step on territory that was once reserved for only the likes of the Big Ten and the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"When you get to the N.I.T. and lose you want to keep playing at that level," Wilson emphasizes, "So now you might want a certain type of kid who plays at that level because you want to go back and win it."

For many years the popular conception of collegiate recruiting has ranged from Russian Roulette to World War III. What is it actually like when two coaches meet at a gym when they're both scouting the same player?

"It's really not bad at all," Wilson says. "We all sit together at games. You can't talk to a kid at the sight of a game. But we share notes on available talent and the youngster we're looking at.

"One of the finer things of recruiting is that you're competing against another school, but you're sitting down comparing the goods. They know they have what the kid is looking for and we also have what the kid is looking for. And they've also gone through the same frustrations."

But (and a big one) when the big-time programs (Penn, etc.) want a ballplayer, "They don't play around," Wilson says. "They make no bones about it. They want you and they tell you. And the good athlete has to feel that he can't give up an opportunity to get to the highest level he feels he's capable of."

So where does this leave UMass and recruiter Wilson?

"Here at UMass we can't afford to make mistakes in recruiting," Wilson noted. "With only three scholarships we can't even afford to make two errors. If we had six then we could get a mistake here or there and come out all right. This is what other schools do."

And so Wilson drives into an atmosphere (with his UMass gas credit card) where Duke sends a chartered jet with all the coaches and dignitaries it could squeeze in. What can he offer?

"The greatest thing we have to offer are our kids," he says. "And then after that in no particular order we offer our style of play, our schedule and the academics at the university.

"During the months of December and January the big guys (6'6 & up) are hot on the market. Then in February you try to fill your needs at guard. But to have any chance of just talking to them and offering them what we, you have to be in the stands weekly just so they can see you.

"As for Stokes (5'8 guard from Philly) we weren't looking for a kid his size unless he could give to us something we didn't have...and he did. He gives us the quickness we need to have.

"But the big thing here is that we got to him first. With other players, when North Carolina and the like stepped in we just had to step out and try for a number two kid."

Presently Wilson is enjoying a two-week vacation from recruiting. But in two weeks he begins again with initial contacts with juniors in high school.

What drives him to do this? "If you want to see your program grow you're almost forced to go where the talent is," he says.

Even in a car?

Why not? He didn't have any flat tires this past year.

Tyler And Okolita Named Swim Team Co-Captains

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

The UMass Varsity Swim Team, 3rd in the Yankee Conference this season, held its annual Captain's Election this past Monday. New co-captains for next year's team are Jack Tyler and Bob Okolita who will take over the job of graduating Captain Herb Schuster.

Jack Tyler is a distance man, swimming the 500 and 1,000 yard freestyle. He's been swimming the 200 yard freestyle in an effort to bring more points to the team.

Bob Okolita swims the 200 yard Individual Medley and 200 yard Breaststroke; one of the key men in these events for UMass.

Demanding that the Board of Trustees concern themselves with the original motion of permanently banning on campus recruitment, these students protested the Trustee's acceptance of President Wood's motion which created a temporary ban on civilian and military recruitment. No ROTC Credit: Recruitment Split

By BOB CALLAHAN

The Board of Trustees voted yesterday to do away with University credit for ROTC courses taught solely by ROTC personnel, to place a one year ban on military and civilian recruitment on the UMass-Boston campus and to lift the recruitment ban on the Amherst and Worcester campuses. The Board also decided to accept only open research projects involving the three campuses, and they gave their support to an amendment sponsored by Mass. Senator Brooke which calls for removal of all forces in Vietnam by August 31 in return for the release of all prisoners of war.

In other important action coming at the end of the meeting, the Board approved an increase in rent and tuition for the Amherst campus. (See related story). A motion was passed that would give back pay to UMass Boston Professor Mrs. Freda Salzman.

The meeting held in the Campus Center erupted with shouting when students opposing campus involvement with the military voiced their disatisfaction with the temporary ban on recruitment at the Boston campus. Seeking a permanent ban, they began shouting and hurling obscenities at the Trustees after the Trustees accepted President Wood's temporary ban proposal.

After the protesting students quieted down, they were allowed to draw up a motion asking for a permanent ban which was presented to the Board by Trustee Gordon. This was nearly unanimously defeated by the Trustees.

At the start of the three hour meeting, representative groups for and against the 3 motions had an opportunity to state their case to the Trustees.

The Marketing Club, in favor of on-campus recruiting, presented a poll taken on campus showing that students were in favor of continuing on-campus recruitment.

Tim Brown, speaking in behalf of ROTC, said that the removal of ROTC would be a dangerous case of censorship. He also cited the liberalizing affect that ROTC has on officers. During his presentation he was constantly interrupted by a hostile audience.

The Center for Social Change speaking against ROTC, on-campus recruitment, and military research, drew a favorable response from most of the students in attendance. They urged the Trustees to start to change the society now by banning the above mentioned programs.

UMass-Boston representatives urged the Trustees to divorce the university from the military by ceasing ROTC, permanently ending recruitment and military research.

After these presentations, the vote was taken by the Trustees.

Finished with the main issue, the Board moved to finish with the rest of the agenda which included other issues including the tuition and rent increases and the Freda Salzman case.

In the Salzman case, the Trustees agreed that the non-reappointment of Mrs. Salzman in 1968 was not fair and discriminatory. They stated that she should be cleared of allegations and her "slate wiped clean". It was directed that she be given her back pay that she lost after being fired as a faculty member at UMass-Boston because of a nepotism ruling.

Several months ago, the Salzman case was a major issue at several Trustee meetings, but yesterday's decision by the Board went almost unnoticed due to the appearance of the campus and the military issue.

Strict security measures were taken at the afternoon session. Campus security officials were stationed in the room throughout the meeting and only those with passes were allowed to attend the meeting. During the meeting, several students and faculty stated their opposition to the strict security measures.

Several hundred students and faculty viewed the procedure over closed circuit television which had been set up in the Campus Center due to the large amount of interest in the issues being discussed.

Antiwar Protestors Arrested At Blockade

By CHARLEY BERKOW

Twelve people were arrested yesterday morning in an anti-war protest on the Route 116 bridge over the Connecticut River at South Deerfield.

The twelve protesters were charged with disrupting the free flow of traffic on the bridge.

The twelve who were arrested were part of a group of about 40 people who were distributing anti-war form letter and leaflets to motorists crossing the bridge during the morning rush hour. Cars were backed up for a quarter of a mile at one point during the demonstration.

Nine of the arrested persons pleaded guilty in court and were fined $25 each. The other three arrested persons pleaded not guilty. They were tried and found guilty later yesterday. They also were fined $25 each. The Center for Social change reportedly set up a fund to pay the fines.

State police charged that the protesters were blocking traffic. One of the demonstrators, who was not arrested, said that cars were allowed to pass freely, but that blockage resulted when most of them stopped or slowed down to pick up the leaflets.

The demonstrators arrived around 7:30 in the morning. They lined up on the sides and in the middle of the road carrying signs and passing out anti-war leaflets and form-letters tto elected officials protesting the war and anti-war leaflets to the motorists.

The State Police, summoned by the local police, arrived at about 8:15 and told the demonstrators to get out of the middle of the road or face arrest. Some of the protesters conferred briefly and decided to stay and be arrested.

The police arrested them, reportedly putting males in buses and females in cars. The road was cleared by 8:30.

Some of the demonstrators who were not arrested distributed the form letters and anti-war leaflets in Greenfield.

One of the demonstrators said that yesterday's protest was similar to the one that blocked traffic on the Coolidge Bridge in Northampton Tuesday. She said that traffic was not backed up as far at the Sunderland Bridge yesterday as it had been at Coolidge Tuesday.

There were no arrests at the Coolidge Bridge in Northampton Tuesday.

State Police said that they hadn't taken any action Tuesday because they weren't prepared and because they hadn't been asked in by the local police.

Third World Caucus Statement

(Editor's Note: The following is a statement from the Steering Committee of the Third World Caucus of the School of Education. It explains why negotiations broke down.)

The Steering Committee of the Third World Caucus has for the past three weeks participated in negotiations with the School of Ed. Negotiating Team concerning demands made by the Third World Caucus. The Committee agreed to hold the negotiating sessions with the assumption that the School of Education was ready to receive Third World perceptions for needed changes in the School on behalf of Third World peoples. We were wrong!

On May 8, 1972, the Committee came to realize that the school of Education Negotiation Team, comprised of all the Deans, the Executive Committee, Chairmen of the School Council, Center Directors, and the Executive Committee, -- all are members of and/or serve on the School Council, shows more concern for the School governance procedures than the lives of 33 C.O.P. students at stake in those negotiations. A 15-hour deliberation on May 8, 1972, dealing with the on-campus Career Opportunities Program ended in a deadlock. The negotiations came to an impasse.

The decisive C.O.P. issue leading to the break-down in negotiations was that of allowing C.O.P. students the responsibility for selecting their own program administrators. The School of Education Negotiating Team's response to and resolutions of this issue were charged as inadequate and irresponsive to the needs of both the C.O.P. students and the Third World Caucus. The Negotiating Team's style was to meander and hedge upon the issues presented in the negotiating process, through the use of petty procedural tactics and over-verbalization.

The attacked documents reveal very clearly that the Negotiating Team does not intend to change the balance of power in decision-making while insisting that the Executive Committee, School Council and/or Dean must approve, review or monitor the program administrative selections made by the C.O.P. students.

The Steering Committee was given sound basis for granting C.O.P. students the authority to select the administrators for their progra:

1. - Past verbal and written commitments by the School of Education to C.O.P. students for participation in the decision-making process have been systematically violated.

2. - At least 75% of the C.O.P. program success can be attributed to the individual efforts of C.O.P. students.

3. - The present C.O.P. administration does not provide significant supportive academic assistance to students i.e. academic advising or academic advising or academic follow through, etc. Therefore, the previous selection processes (of administration personnel) are inadequate and must be discontinued.

4 - The greatest competence to select program administrators lies with the C.O.P. students them-

Statement By Dean Dwight Allen

(Editor's Note: The following is a statement from Dean Dwight Allen of the School of Education on the breakdown of negotiations between the School of Education and the Third World Caucus.)

When the School of Education affirmed its commitment to combat institutional racism, few could have predicted where that commitment would lead us. To some, that stand seemed a ray of hope in American education, to others, it seemed a naive gesture of futility in the face of overwhelming social evils. For myself, the truth of the intention and of the reality of that commitment has fallen somewhere in between–I believe the School of Education has been a national leader in its effort to combat institutional racism; I also believe that much remains to be done. Where we are today, however, leaves me saddened and impels me to speak out.

To understand what has happened in the School of Education requires examining the larger framework in which the events have taken place. Without a broad perspective, fruitful dialogue and responsible decisions cannot occur.

A larger framwork for understanding the Career Opportunities Program is necessary. The three COP Programs in Springfield, Worcester, and Brooklyn are first of all a commitment by the University of Massachusetts and the School of Education to provide the educational training and accreditation to complement the career lattices for para-professionals working in their local urban schools. In the agreements drawn up for University participation, the School of Education is directly responsible to the federal government and to the local educational systems and the representatives of those communities. The on-campus component of COP is specifically a part of the Worcester and Springfield COP programs, and the administration of that component is ultimately answerable to Springfield and Worcester and the Federal government.

The COP programs are unique in having minority input into the programs at every level of their administration. Most of the federal administrators we have dealt with in Washington are minorities. In Springfield, Worcester, and Brooklyn, the local community boards are predominantly minorities, and the participants are predominantly minorities. In the Center for Urban Education and the School of Education, both the administrators and the participants are predominantly minorities. All COP programs are now under pressure from Washington due to political and budgetary constraints. All COP programs have been cut by 6% and no additional COP programs are being funded or expanded. Clearly the on-campus segment of COP (40 students of approximately 350) has had conflicts that must be resolved without jeopardizing the other programs and without destroying the on-campus segment as well.

In recent weeks, the Center for Urban Education, which has administered the COP programs in cooperation with our Office for Special Programs and the Governor Sargent Tours Belchertown

Yesterday's visit to Belchertown State School by Governor Sargent was highlighted by his conversation with Joe Sylvia and the amazing warmth with which he was greeted by the residents, overlooking the Governor at right. (MDC photo by Alan Chapman)

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Belchertown--Gov. Francis W. Sargent yesterday toured the Belchertown State School for the retarded.

"In the next days and weeks," the Governor said, "I will be considering what I learned here today and what others have suggested in order to make decisions on future budget program policy for the mentally retarded."

The Governor said the taxpayers of Massachusetts must not only recognize the "deplorable conditions" at the Belchertown School, but must be prepared to carry the burden.

"When we ask for money they (taxpayers) must realize that people can not be forced to live in dungeons," added Sargent.

The Governor also announced plans for the completion of comprehensive medical evaluations at Belchertown and a new system of medical care for the residents of all the schools for the retarded.

UMass Professor Ben Ricci, the leading organizer of a class-action suit against the state Department of Mental Health and the president of the Belchertown Friends Association, said the Governor was "misrepresenting and manipulating" the facts and that the Belchertown parents were the ones who forced the issue of medical evaluations.

"The Governor ought to be reminded that the medical evaluations are the result of a court order and our class-action suit," stated Ricci.

Sargent added, "I am hopeful that total evaluations at the large schools for the retarded will be completed by the end of this year. In addition, the ongoing program of continuous care should be completely operable by June 1, 1973."

The Governor said the lack of professional staffing and programming were the major problems at the Belchertown School. He said the problems could be traced to money and administrative factors.

On the impact of the Governor's visit, Ricci said he doesn't expect anything to happen.

"I feel the real progress will come from the lawsuit. Rhetoric means nothing without action," added Ricci.

On the budget cuts at Belchertown, Sargent said, "I have cut the budget requests for every department head in state services, but what really alarms me now is that the cuts I recommended have been further cut by the legislature."

"The legislature has gone on a cutting kick that is wholly irresponsible," continued Sargent. "I'm trying to reorder priorities and will continue to fight for the restoration of funds at the Belchertown School."

An informed observer said the Governor recommended that $4 million be cut from the requested Belchertown budget. He said the legislature is now trying to make further cuts on the school budget.

Asked if the class-action suit has had any effect on his thinking, the Governor replied that he has not paid any particular attention to what is going on in court and refused to comment further on the case.

Ricci said, "The Governor's visit at Belchertown was the direct result of student pressure." He said this pressure evolved from the issues raised by the suit.

During the day the Governor met with Dr. Roland Nagle, superintendent of Belchertown and Dr. Nagle's staff, as well as with representatives of the parents of Belchertown residents, and associations of citizens concerned about the welfare of the retarded.

On the question of community and residential living centers, the Governor stated, "Clearly this is the direction we're moving in not only for the retarded, but for all human services."

Sargent said the work that is being done by the volunteers, especially the UMass students, with the regular staff is the most promising thing he has seen during the tour.

"A start has been made at Belchertown but the whole system has to be included," continued the Governor. "I'm certainly going to do everything I can to upgrade mental retardation."

State Human Services Secretary Peter Goldmark said whatever the state does for the Belchertown School has to be done for all the other state institutions for the retarded.

A motion to punish Goldmark was filed last Monday by a group of parents of Belchertown State School residents for refusing to obey a previous court injunction.

On March 2, 1972, U.S. District Court Judge Francis J.W. Ford, modifying an earlier deadline, ordered Goldmark to make a complete evaluation of the medical needs of each resident at the Belchertown School by May 1, 1972.

The Monday motion states that Goldmark has failed to complete the evaluations by May at Belchertown, and instead, has moved to further change the deadline to July 3, 1972, five months from the day first ordered.

Goldmark said he would not mind being 20 days late if he was able to get something going at all the institutions for the retarded in the state.

Ricci said Goldmark has not done the job at the Belchertown School and there is currently only a "minimal amount of medical activity at the other four state institutions."

Anti-War Activities Continue

There will be a continuation today of local and national response to Pres. Nixon's statement and actions concerning recent re-escalation of the war.

The five college area is coordinating a mass demonstration at Westover Air Force Base today in which both the President of Amherst College and Dean of Students of Mt. Holyoke are rumored to be participating. Also, a large demonstration has been scheduled for twelve noon Thursday at the Federal Building in Springfield.

Saturday, May 13, another Westover demonstration is planned for ten o'clock in the morning.

On Sunday evening, students will be meeting at 7:00 at the Center for Social Change, for anyone interested in leafletting factories. Among those planned to be visited are Monsanto and Uniroyal. Local blockading and leafletting will continue next week.

In boston, an anti-war demonstration is planned for twelve noon on Friday at the Kennedy Building. The Peoples Coalition for Peace and Justice have called for a march on the Navy yards in Boston for Saturday.

On national level–on May 13, Saturday, the Vietnam Veterans Against the War have called for national demonstration in Washington. The National Student Association and the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice are organizing massive lobbying in Washington throughout the week of May 15-19. Demonstrations at all air and military bases are planned throughout the country on Armistice Day, May 20. Also, May 20 has been declared Angela Davis Day in San Juan, California--people on the West Coast are expected to organize support actions for her.

A legal demonstration at Washington, D.C. has been called for May 21 by PDPJ, and NPAC, antiwar and labor groups. The followup of this action will then occur on Monday, May 22, with a mass blockade of the Pentagon planned.

Further activities on both national and local levels are now being planned. The Center for Social Change will serve as a clearing house for current actions. Call for further information on activities, transportation, etc. Numbers for the Center are: 545-0289, 545-0135, 545-0155.

Britain Moves On Vietnam

LONDON (AP)-Britain sought Wednesday to head off a confrontation of the superpowers over Vietnam with a call for Soviet help in setting up a new international peace conference.

Formal Soviet reaction to the proposal was noncommittal. British authorities took this to mean the Kremlin leaders have yet to decide how to meet President Nixon's attempt to cut off North Vietnam from its arms suppliers.

But envoys representing the Soviet and Chinese governments, speaking separately, assailed latest developments in American policy.

Informants reported Ambassador Mikhail Smirnovsky of the Soviet Union told the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, he sees the mining of North Vietnam's sea approaches as an act of American aggression.

The charge d'affaires for China, Pei Tsien-chang, told a high British political authority Nixon's preconditions for ending the war are totally unacceptable, sources said. The Americans are in no position to lay down terms for a settlement, he was quoted as saying.

Douglas-Home had summoned Smirnovsky to propose joint British-Soviet action for reconvening the Geneva Conference on Vietnam. In 1954, the nine-member conference negotiated an end to the war then raging against French rule.

British and Soviet foreign ministers presided over the talks and still share certain peacemaking functions.

Judging by the reactions of Smirnovsky and Pei, it seemed unlikely that Russia and China would agree to attend a new Geneva-type peace parley.

The British Foreign Office, in announcing Douglas-Home's initiative, gave few details beyond saying Smirnovsky "undertook to convey Sir Alec's views to Soviet Foreign Minister Andre A. Gromyka."

Moscow has rebuffed similar British proposals twice in the last five weeks.

Britain's Conservative government has displayed sympathetic understanding of Nixon's aims in Vietnam but has stopped short of expressing outright support for his policy of mining port entrances.

In private, however, top British authorities seem less than happy with some aspects of the President's decision.

France said the President's measures might create the "risk of a confrontation between the world powers." Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann told the Cabinet in Paris of the "deep concern of the French government over the brutal aggravation of the situation in Vietnam" and called for political negotiations to end the conflict.

U.S. May Use Force To Uphold Blockade

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird indicated Wednesday the United States might use military force to stop foreign ships from entering North Vietnamese ports, and opened the possibility of blocking a Soviet supply airlift.

Laird implied also that ships now in North Vietnamese harbors may be subject to air attack if they attempt to unload their cargoes.

Although the United States has yet to receive any official Soviet government response to the sealing of Hanoi's ports with mines, Laird said, "There is some evidence that there was some change in course" of ships nearing the harbors which have been mined with devices set to become activated at 7 a.m. EDT Thursday.

He disclosed that at least one Soviet vessel scheduled to enter Haiphong either Tuesday or Wednesday has shifted course. Defense sources said it appeared to be heading for a different port.

However, a State Department spokesman said Laird's comments on the status of Soviet shipping showed "no definitive pattern" of Moscow's response to the mining.

In discussing at a broadcast news conference what the United States might do to prevent supplies from reaching the North, Laird appeared to have taken a tougher position than outlined Tuesday by presidential adviser Henry Kissinger.

Kissinger had said that no attempt would be made to prevent ships from landing supplies. But Laird, when asked specifically if he intended to leave the impression the United States would stop ships from going in, replied: "That is what I meant to leave."

"I consider the entire land mass of North Vietnam" would be an area for delivery of war material, he said at another point, suggesting that any effort to fly supplies in could be met with American force.

"Our policy is to stop the delivery to the North Vietnamese of these supplies and we will take those actions that are necessary to stop that delivery," he replied when asked if the United States would attack by sea or air any foreign vessels attempting to enter North Vietnamese waters.

And when asked if the United States would block a Russian airlift, he answered: "We will take steps that are necessary to see that these supplies are cut off that are being used to carry on this aggression and this marauding throughout Southeast Asia."

As Laird spoke, U.S. warplanes were carrying out the heaviest raids over the North in more than four years, hitting targets in the Hanoi-Haiphong area and further north about 60 miles from the Chinese border.

Specific targets were not disclosed, but it is likely the U.S. will bomb enemy air fields in attacks which could suppress air defenses and also hamper the landing of supplies.

Radio Hanoi charged that U.S. planes attacked the Soviet cargo ship Pevek in North Vietnamese waters Tuesday, causing heavy damage and wounding four crewmen.

Pentagon officials refused to comment, but noted that American aircraft were seeding the area with underwater mines. "There was a lot of firing going on by both sides," a spokesman said, acknowledging that a ship might have been caught in the crossfire.

In other developments connected with the Vietnam situation:

—In a departure from past patterns, Democratic members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee voted 10 to 4 in favor of a resolution to end all U.S. military activity by Oct. 1, contingent upon release of American prisoners and safe withdrawal of U.S. forces.

U.S. Bombs Hanoi-Haiphong

SAIGON (AP)-U.S. jets shot down seven MIGs, bombed the Hanoi-Haipong complex and ranged over other scattered areas Wednesday in the deepest and heaviest air attacks on North Vietnam in more than four years.

Hanoi claimed 16 U.S. planes shot down and many pilots taken prisoner. The U.S. Command in Saigon did not mention any American losses.

One more period of daylight remained before U.S. mines dropped in North Vietnamese ports are automatically activated.

In Washington, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said one Soviet cargo vessel and possibly more had changed course since the mining of the ports Tuesday morning to cut off war supplies.

Laird reported 16 Soviet vessels in Haipong, the North's chief port, along with 5 from China, 4 from Britain and 11 others from various Communist countries.

The mines are set to activate at 7 p.m. Thursday-7 a.m. EDT.

A Hanoi broadcast said U.S. planes attacked the Soviet cargo ship Pavek Tuesday in North Vietnamese waters, causing heavy damage and wounding four crewmen.

A Pentagon spokesman in Washington said "no ships were targeted" by U.S. planes. But he added that in the mine-seeding operations Tuesday there was heavy firing between U.S. planes and North Vietnamese ground installations and the spokesman did not rule out the possibility the Soviet vessel could have been caught in crossfire.

Another Hanoi broadcast said a U.S. destroyer was set afire by coastal guns while she shelled Haiphong Wednesday. Hanoi claimed two other destroyers were set afire off Haiphong on Tuesday.

In Saigon, President Nguyen Van Thieu imposed martial law throughout the nation apparently to strengthen the government's hand in dealing with the North Vietnamese offensive that began March 30.

Thieu also fired Lt. Gen. Ngo Dzu as his military commander in the central highlands where the enemy has taken over territory and threatens to seize Kontum, a provincial capital.

The U.S. Command in Saigon announced the massive air strikes on North Vietnam and said more are in store.

Wednesday's raids carried to rail and fuel storage sites "in the vicinity" of Hanoi and the major port city of Haiphong, the command said. It did not pinpoint the distances of the targets from the two cities.

In Brief...

VIRGINITY RATE LOWERING

WASHINGTON (AP) — A study of unmarried girls between the ages of 15 and 19 indicates that nearly half of those who are 19 have had sexual intercourse.

By age groups the study showed among 15-year-olds 13.8 per cent had had intercourse; 16-year-olds 21.2 per cent; 17-year-olds 26.6 per cent; 18-year-olds 37.1 per cent; and 19-year-olds 46 per cent.

This figures out to an average of just 29 per cent of non-virgins among the whole group.

Despite this wide familiarity with sex, the study indicated most of the girls did not practice contraception regularly.

TERRORISM CONTINUES

BELFAST (AP) — Terrorists and street crowds hit Northern Ireland during the night with a new wave of bombing, shooting and stoning of British troops. Four soldiers and one militiaman were wounded and buildings were damaged in several towns.

Across the border, the Irish republic was voting today in a national referendum deciding whether the country should join the European Common Market at the end of the year.

BOYLE TESTIFIES

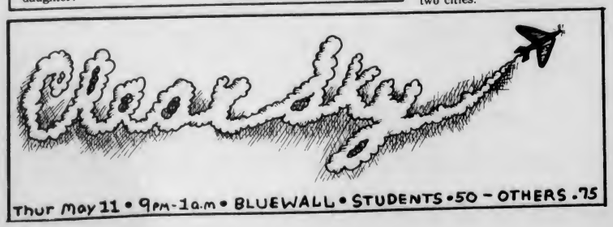
Michigan Petitions Court On Busing

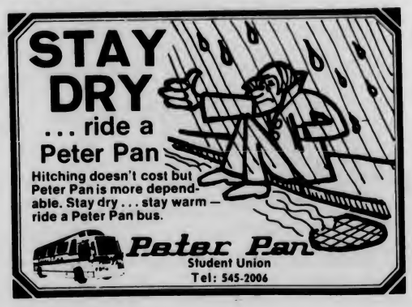
WASHINGTON (AP) - The State of Michigan has appealed to the Supreme Court to stop a federal judge from integrating Detroit's largely black public schools with white schools in the suburbs.

The Detroit case is the first to reach the Court in which the Justice Department has sought to intervene to slow down segregation.

The judge, Stephen J. Roth, has found both the state and the Detroit Board of Education at least partly responsible for "the segregated condition" of the city's schools and said he will order some kind of areawide integration plan.



Frank J. Kelley, the Michigan attorney general, told the court in a petition Wednesday that unless it reviews Roth's ruling soon, up to a million children in 86 school districts could be loaded onto buses next September to attend schools far away from their homes.



The state said Roth's findings that officials fostered segregation are "clearly and patently erroneous." Kelley said racial segregation in Michigan public schools has been illegal since 1867 and that there is no evidence that any of the suburban districts are guilty.

On Tuesday, Judge Roth denied the request until Congress acts on President Nixon's proposal for a moratorium on court-ordered busing. Roth has completed hearings on possible integration plans and is expected to order one of them into effect soon.

The Supreme Court, meanwhile, has been in recess since April 24. It returns to public session next Monday, but has no more time set aside this term for oral argument. Therefore, it is highly unlikely that the court will rule quickly on Michigan's petition, particularly since Kelley did not ask formally for expedited consideration.

Last February, the U.S. Circuit Court in Cincinnati declined to review Judge Roth's findings because the decision is not considered final until he orders a particular plan implemented.

Antiwar Protests Continue

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS-Protests of the mining of North Vietnamese harbors reached the U.S. Capitol Wednesday.

Speaker Carl Albert, D—Okla., barred all visitors to the galleries of the House of Representatives for three hours as about 300 youths, nearly all black and described as high school students, chanted antiwar slogans outside. Later in the day he reopened to them.

The group also staged a sit-in at the House's Cannon Office Building.

Democratic Senators Harold Hughes of Iowa and Alan Cranston of California said they will lead a prayer vigil on the Capitol steps at 7 a.m. Thursday-the hour the mines are scheduled to be activated.

Cranston and Rep. Abner Mikva, D-Ill., called on students to converge on Washington to urge their senators and representatives to oppose the latest war moves.

The Californian said he fully supported the National Student Lobby's call to mobilize public opinion and legislators around end-the-war legislation.

Layton Olson, the Lobby's executive director, said President Nixon, by mining the harbors and extending the bombing, had "activated a domestic time bomb."

"It is clear that the only way to end this war is to legislate an end," he said.

Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago, long considered a hawk on Vietnam, said he did not believe Nixon had the right to mine the harbors.

Gov. Reuben Askew ordered 100 law enforcement officers to Gainesville where 220 youths were arrested during demonstrations Tuesday at the University of Florida.

Demonstrations resumed Wednesday in Gainesville when about 250 students blockaded a highway bordering the campus with a rope barricade.

The blockade began after several hundred students attended a rally where they heard heard Sen. George S. McGovern, speaking by telephone from Washington, say: "Nixon's behavior is more like a king acting out of divine right than for a free society."

Law students at Florida State University in Tallahassee wore black armbands, but otherwise that campus was quiet.

In most places during the day police and other law enforcement officers appeared to be maintaining order.

A demonstration at Brooklyn College broke up when participants were threatened with arrest, and about 50 Western Reserve University demonstrators were dispersed by police in Cleveland.

Meanwhile, students at Nichols, College, a four-year business school at Dudley, Mass., voted overwhelmingly to support President Nixon's policies in Vietnam.

The vote among 369 students who took part in the balloting was 71 per cent in favor of Nixon's policies, 25.5 per cent opposed and 3.5 per cent with no opinion.

About 40 students from colleges in Western Massachusetts blocked a highway at Deerfield. Police arrested 13 who refused to leave.

Police arrested 50 persons in Burlington, Vt., who tried to block entrances to the federal building. At the University of Vermont, about 150 students continued to sit-in at the ROTC building.

A Dartmouth College chaplain and the head of its drug information program were arrested when antiwar demonstrators blocked a driveway and tried to persuade employes of the Army's Cold Regions Research and Engineering Laboratory to stay away from work.

Charged with obstructing an officer were the Rev. Harvey Pinyoun, 28, and Donlon Wade, 23.

About 100 students at Swarthmore, Pa., College went to Washington to tell their congressmen they oppose President Nixon's intensification of military pressure.

Humphrey Leads In Nebraska Delegate Count

(AP)-Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey and George S. McGovern turned their attention to the next crop of presidential primaries Wednesday as the campaigners gave way to the ballot counters and a long, slow tally of the votes that awarded the national convention delegates of Nebraska and West Virginia.

Humphrey held the lead for a majority of the Nebraska delegation, in a state where Democrats chose McGovern in Tuesday's presidential preference test. But the count was inconclusive, and ballots from the area where McGovern ran strongest in the preference vote won't be tallied until Thursday.

The same slowprocess of counting a complex delegate selection ballot was under way in West Virginia. In the first trickle of returns there, Humphrey's supporters weren't doing as well as their candidate did in sweeping to a presidential preference victory over Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

Tuesday's preference polls bound no delegates. The impact of the McGovern win in Nebraska and the Humphrey victory in West Virginia was purely psychological.

The real stakes, 35 Democratic National Convention votes from West Virginia and 22 from Nebraska, were settled in separate competition.

Exactly what happened in those contests will not be clear for some time. It could be Friday before all of West Virginia's delegate contests are settled.

McGovern went into the Tuesday primaries leading with 322 delegates. Humphrey had 235 1/2 and Wallace 213.

Both contenders were in Washington Wednesday, with Humphrey staging a campaign foray to Baltimore, for Maryland's primary next Tuesday. McGovern was to campaign Thursday in Flint, Mich., for the Michigan primary, also next Tuesday.

Incomplete and inconclusive returns from Nebraska showed delegates backing Minnesota's Humphrey in the lead for 12 convention slots, McGovern men for 9, and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine for 1.

McGovern's share seemed certain to increase. No votes had been reported from the Lincoln area, site of the state university, where the South Dakota senator ran strongest in the preference balloting.

In the first, sparse returns in West Virginia competition for nine delegates elected statewide, three uncommitted delegate candidates were ahead, and supporters of Humphrey, McGovern and Muskie each were leading for two convention seats.

Nebraska staged Tuesday's only Republican competition, and President Nixon swept to towering victory there. He had 167,752 votes, or 93 per cent.

John D. Rockefeller IV, the West Virginia secretary of state, swept as expected to the Democratic nomination to challenge Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr., a Republican.

Republican Sen. Karl T. Curtis was renominated in Nebraska and Terry Carpenter, 72, of Scottsbluff, won the Democratic nomination to run against him.

Commission Reports:

If You Like Sex, You'll Like Dope

WASHINGTON (AP)-If you like sex the chances are good you'll like marijuana, a government commission reports. But it cautions that the drug is no aphrodisiac, nor does it heighten sexual enjoyment for all users.

The National Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse said it found evidence that marijuana appears to intensify pleasurable experiences and heighten the senses for many users, even though parts of these effects may be psychological.

"It is this fact which probably explains why substantial proportions of marijuana users characterize their sexual experiences under the influence of the drug as particularly intense, prolonged, sensuous, and pleasurable," the commission said.

It said substantial numbers of persons report they are more interested in sex after smoking pot, and found evidence that marijuana relaxes inhibitions and reduces a person's normal restrains against sex, allowing users to respond more freely to sexual desires.

But even so, marijuana isn't the aphrodisiac that many of its fans claim it to be, the commission said.

While pot makes sex more enjoyable for a lot of men and women, the commission said, it also has no such effect on a lot of others, and may even decrease sexual desire in some.

"At best, available evidence is inconclusive," the commission said. It said research indicates generally that the more a person uses marijuana and the more he or she expects it to intensify sexual pleasure, the more likely it is to do so.

Research also showed that marijuana users are more sexually active than non-users. For example, the commission said, one survey of more than 500 college undergraduates found that 72 per cent of marijuana users had engaged in premarital sex, while only 34 per cent of non-users had done so.

But the commission said it isn't clear whether pot leads to sex or sex leads to pot. The same survey found that of those who reported having sex before age 16, only 7 per cent denied trying any illegal drug, while fully 47 per cent of the virgins said they stayed clear of drugs as well as sex

Campaign Costs Hit Eight Million

WASHINGTON (AP) - Democratic presidential hopefuls have spent at least $8 million so far and could double or even triple that figure before the party picks its standard-bearer in July.

Top spenders to date are Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey and George McGovern, between $1.5-2 million each; Alabama Gov. George Wallace, at least $500,000; and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie who invested $1.9 million before dropping out of the Democratic primaries.

The $8 million is a bare minimum estimate based on public documents and other sources and doesn't include money spent for various candidates by dozens of state and local committees. Generally, however, state committees appear to have dealt in relatively small amounts of money.

Most campaign contributions have come from individuals in amounts ranging from $5 to several hundred thousand dollars in loans.

Far more spending is expected by Humphrey, Wallace and McGovern, the three leading Democratic contenders remaining from a once-crowded field of presidential aspirants.

Ten presidential primaries, including the costly battlegrounds of California and New York lie ahead.

DeShields Named As Assistant To Chancellor

James I. DeShields, a former executive for HEW and other government agencies, has been named special assistant to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, of UMass-Amherst.

Mr. DeShields comes to UMass from the Washington, D.C., office of HEW, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, where he had been since July of 1971 as director of Operational Systems Division of the Office of Field Management.

In the four years previous, Mr. DeShields had served a number of other federal agencies. He was a community development specialist with the HEW Center for Community Planning, an Office of Evaluation program analyst with the Manpower Administration of the Department of Labor, a planning and research specialist with VISTA, and a supervising research and training specialist with the New Careers Program of the District of Columbia government.

Previous to that Mr. DeShields held administrative or research posts with Howard University, President Kennedy's Commission on Juvenile Delinquency, the American University and Crownsville, Md., State Hospital. He has a B.S. degree in philosophy and psychology from Morgan State College and an M.S. in psychology from Virginia State College.

He has done graduate study at Howard, the University of Massachusetts and the University of Delaware and is author or co-author of nine publications in the areas of psychology and public affairs.

Mr. DeShields is married and the father of four children.

Faculty Meeting Today

An important General Faculty Meeting is scheduled to be held today at 11:15 A.M. in Herter 227. This meeting has been postponed twice from its previously scheduled times of April 20 and May 4.

The two major items of business on the agenda deal with the changing of the composition of the Athletic Council and a proposal designed to change the "purpose of the Faculty Senate." As exerpted from a memo sent out to all faculty members, these are:

1. "An amendment to the Constitution of the Senate that would change the composition and certain other features of the Athletic Council. The proposed amendment was adopted by the required three-fifths majority of the Faculty Senate. It was presented for a first reading at the March 16 meeting of the faculty; it will be voted on at this meeting."

2. "An amendment to the Constitution of the Faculty Senate that would change the purpose of the Senate. Currently its purpose, as set forth in the second section of the Constitution, is to "recommend policies affecting the University as a whole". The amendment proposes to change this purpose to "recommend academic policies affecting the University as a whole." The proposed amendment was presented as a petition to the Secretary of the Senate, signed by fifty members of the faculty from at least five colleges, schools, or faculties, as required by the Constitution. The amendment was presented for a first reading at the March 16 meeting of the faculty; it will be voted on at this meeting."

5. - Any process which includes a vote or decision by the School of Education governance procedures violates the mandate to the Steering Committee from the Third World Caucus.

On Tuesday, April 25, 1972, the School of Education Negotiating Team and the Steering Committee of the Third World Caucus mutually agreed that "Decisions made during negotiations may be considered as a final agreement when the spokesman for each party indicates agreement. If either spokesman declines, then no agreement has been reached." However, on May 8, 1972, the School of Education Negotiating Team breached this agreement by stating that all of the decisions of these negotiating parties were subject to change and/or ratification by the Executive Committee and School Council.

On April 12, 1972, the first mandate of the Third World Caucus, then the Minority Caucus, states: "The acceptance of this Caucus (therefore, the Steering Committee) as the only legitimate bargaining agent of the minority community is a prior condition to any discussions or negotiations between the minority community and the School."

The Steering Committee has carried this mandate forward and documents exist which clearly acknowledge this fact. Consequently, neither the Executive Committee and/or the School Council has no decision-making powers. Any attempt to impose the influence of these organization is an attempt to negate the power of the Third World Caucus Steering Committee and can only bring the negotiation process to a point of closure.

Once it was realized that any decision reached could possibly be countermanded by the School governance mechanism, it was understood by the Steering Committee that the entire three weeks of negotiations was a fraud and a waste of many precious working/study hours sacrificed by members of the Committee and the Third World Caucus.

This account indicates that there had been no intention on behalf of the School of Education to recognize the Third World Caucus as a rational, intelligent body of people with the necessary integrity to be self-governing. Further, it is a clear indication that the School of Education's intention to combat racism has failed as evidenced through this breach of negotiating communication.

Statement By Dean Dwight Allen

University, has come under unfair attack. I affirm, as I have in the past, my support for the goals and accomplishments of the Center for Urban Education. Whatever problems they have encountered in administering the on-campus segment of the COP Program, whatever mistakes have been made by us all, I stand behind the record of the Center for Urban Education to: recruit over 50% minority faculty and doctoral and masters students to the Center; to develop and administer programs which have the potential of creating new professional opportunities for hundreds of minorities in the American educational system; and to create undergraduate courses and teacher education programs which deal directly with training teachers for urban schools and with combatting racism.

It is too easy to sit back and take pot shots at those who have taken the greatest risks and tried to achieve difficult goals. I submit a charge to all centers and programs in the School of Education to take seriously the task of combatting institutionalized racism and to produce results.

The School of Education has always sought diversity and a a toleration of differences. Today, we seem stretched to the limits of our capacity. No one has ever claimed that combatting racism would be easy. But it is clear to me that what is happening now is not healthy for the community and is causing much pain and perhaps irrevocable damage to individual lives and futures. Ironically, it is the minority members of our community who are most vulnerable and least protected. When anyone surveys the sides taken on issues in the past months, it is obvious that lines have not been drawn--blacks against whites, students against faculty and administration, or even radicals

Though some of the rhetoric that has emerged has claimed that these polarizations were at the source of the difficulty, the situation has just not been that simple. We have come further than those divisions would suggest.

I had sincerely hoped that the issues raised in the past months would strengthen our School and would further our commitment to combat institutional racism. However, I feel we now see what gains we have made endangered by self-seeking factionalism, distorted emotional appeals, destructive forces, and rampant confusion.

Meanwhile, minority members of our community continue to be exposed to unfair personal attacks and to an intolerable level of stress and anguish.

Any group within the School of Education has the right to make their views heard and to organize to further their views. But no group has the right either to coopt the individual rights of others or to subvert arbitrarily the governing structures of the School. The effort to make their views known must not become the occasion for destroying the structures we have established or for denying the individual rights of others. We have demonstrated repeatedly that structures can be changed when they do not accomplish desired goals, and that this can be done in a productive way.

I repeat, the School of Education is clearly not polarized into minorities and non-minorities fighting each other. Our administration, our faculty, our graduate and undergraduate students, or governing bodies, our most important committees--contain both minority and non-minority representation. Now the hardest part of the task is upon us--to support honest, open differences and to seek equitable and creative solutions to problems.

We at the School of Edication have taken some first steps in combatting racism. The future way will not be easy. Conflicts will not go away by our wishing them to vanish. Hundreds of years of oppression and inequity are not overturned in a few short months or years. Nevertheless, an individual's lifetime is short, and we must affirm our responsibility to individuals.

I sincerely hope that negotiations can be re-established. The issues are too important to allow procedural differences or vested interests, minority or majority, to preclude our seeking imaginative solutions to the pressing and overpowering issues of institutional racism in our society. If we cannot continue negotiations with the Steering Committee of the Minority Caucus, the School of Education will have to find alternative ways to proceed. Our commitment remains to serve all members of our community, to provide them access to the highest positions of leadership and responsibility-- individually and collectively.

Women Challenge ABC On Sexism

NEW YORK (LNS) - Channel 7 in New York, flagship station of ABC—TV, one of the country's three major networks, is under attack by the National Organization of Women. NOW asserts that ABC is "the most blatant offender against women" although they added that NBC and CBS are not "beyond review."

In a brief submitted to the Federal Communications Commission, NOW argued that ABC should be denied a renewal of its license on the grounds that it violated three grounds for licensing: "ascertaining the needs, fairness in presenting controversial issues and equal opportunity in employment."

It took the NOW staff two years of watching "tens of thousands of hours of "ABC programming. The resulting brief asserted that "On ABC women are consistently shown as unintelligent, irresponsible, dominated by men, defined by their anatomy and incapable of independent thought and action." Some examples of this sexism were given:

1) Although seven out of eight U.S. medals in the Winter Olympics were won by women, ABC allotted only 40 minutes of air time for coverage while they allotted 2 minutes and 15 seconds to a women's pancake eating contest.

2) When the Equal Opportunity Amendment was passed no mention was made on the evening news although a full minute was devoted the next night to the opposition.

3) Roger Grimsby of the local Evening News was cited especially for making "snide comments" about women. For example in March 1970 on the news report on the first celebration of International Women's Day in New York City, Grimsby followed up the coverage with the remark, "And now for another item of trivia."

So far, ABC officials have refused to comment, saying that they haven't seen the brief yet. The FCC has yet to examine the complaint, but the renewal of licenses comes up on June 1, so both will be forced to act soon.

As Police Look On

Pain For Profit

NEW YORK (LNS) — Headaches probably send people scurrying to their medicine cabinets for relief more often than any other ailment. So naturally there are a lot of medications around trying to corner some of the market. Especially on TV (since watching it is probably the world's best way to get a headache in the first place) the ads seem to chase each other across the screen, each claiming to be the ultimate in headache relief.

The ad man's voice comes across intelligently and sincerely. "Is there any way to improve on Bayer Aspirin to make it stronger? Well, suppose you buffered it, or combined it with other drugs, fizzed it, or tried to find a stronger ingredient and gave it a fancy name. First of all, aspirin is already the strongest pain reliever you can buy. Fizzing would not improve it, the combination and buffering do not add speed or gentleness either. Nothing is faster or more effective than Bayer Aspirin. Even we cannot improve it, though we keep trying."

A little later on another voice just as sincere and intelligent says: "And Vanquish has a unique way of doing it--relieving headaches--with extra strength and gentle buffers. It is the only leading pain reliever that does."

Are these conflicting claims true? And if they are true, why is it that Bayer and Vanquish are both manufactured by the Sterling Drug Company?

NEW YORK (LNS) — While police looked on, eight members of the Gay Activists Alliance were attacked as they attempted to distribute leaflets at a New York political dinner in April.

The GAA demonstrators were trying to call attention to the suppression of gay news by members of the Inner Circle, a prestigious organization of political reporters who were attending the dinner.

Allen Ross, one of the activists, told reporters that "with blood dripping from my mouth I was taken to the escalator, beaten again and thrown down the escalator. The police on the ground floor saw the beating and did absolutely nothing."

John Vouriotis, who was thrown against the wall of a room backstage and kicked, told how afterwards he "spoke with 12 patrolmen and three sergeants and all of them refused me permission to go back into the hotel. One sergeant gave me the excuse that the Hilton management did not want him to go in and press charges because, as he put it, there were dignitaries there."

A number of witnesses charged that one of the primary assailants was Michael Maye, head of New York's powerful fireman's union, and a former Golden Gloves heavyweight boxing champion.

Jim Owles, one of those attacked, may have sustained permanent eye damage, and another, Marty Manford, was bruised on the face, torso and genitals and may have suffered internal injury.

The New York Civil Liberties Union agreed to donate its services in pressing charges against the Police Department, and a private law firm is studying a second case against Maye.

Rockets To The Moon; Rockets To Viet Nam

CHICAGO (LNS) -"Apollo 16 Heads Toward Moon" and "We Walk on Moon Again." Once again astronauts' hijinks have pushed news of U.S. defeats in Vietnam to the bottom of the front page or even to pages two, three, or four in some daily papers.

If you have the vague notion that this has happened before, you aren't the only one. In fact, a close examination of the dates of Apllo flights, made by a reporter for the Chicago Seed, reveals that moon news has bumped coverage of "enemy" offensives and news of antiwar actions off the front pages of daily papers many times.

The first "coincidence" seems to occur with Apollo 12, which left Cape Kennedy on November 14, 1969 and returned to earth 10 days later. On November 12th, antiwar protesters gathered in Washington for a three-day moratorium of marches and actions. Although over 500,000 persons participated, they received minimal coverage. But the three military officers received full coverage, including exhaustive reports on their family life and interviews with their wives and kids.

Was this merely a coincidence? Maybe so, but let's look a little further. Apollo 13 blasted into space and into the newspaper headlines April 11 1970. The next day small items in some papers began mentioning South Vietnamese troop movements near the Cambodian border. Due to a Saigon-imposed news blackout, most U.S. papers had nothing more to say about the U.S. - sponsored invasion of Cambodia until after Apollo 13 returned to earth, April 17th.

As Apollo 13 landed on the moon in 3-inch headlines, a moratorium focusing on war taxes which brought demonstrators to IRS headquarters in Washington received almost no press coverage.

Apollo 14 left earth January 31, 1971 and returned February 9th. While America was bombarded with astronaut trivia, you may recall that the "Secret War in Laos" was made official, as Saigon troops invaded.

Apollo 15, which traveled between July 26 and August 7th, 1971 accompanied no significant war escalation as far as we know.

But as we are all aware Apollo 16 blasted off in the midst of the American bombing of North Vietnam and crushing defeats for the Saigon army and Nixon's Vietnamization policy in the south; Vietnam and Apollo 16 vied for headlines in the straight press.

The Nixon administration has effectively timed the Apollo flights to divert attention away from American invasions of Cambodia and Laos, U.S. bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong, and the gathering of antiwar protesters in Washington. Is it all coincidence?

Be on the lookout for Apollo 17.

Collins-Candidate For State Rep.

Former President of the Student Senate, James G. Collins, class of 1968, today announced his candidacy for State Representative from the Second Hampshire District.

While at the University Collins helped lead the drive for student self-determination and participation in all phases of University life. Remembering his leadership days as a student, Collins reflected that "we worked for a University community where students, faculty, and non-professional as well as professional staff could work together in mutual respect for the attainment of quality higher education."

For the past three years, Collins has been employed by "Upward Bound", a program for low-income black, white, and Spanish-speaking young people in Western Massachusetts. The program provides personal and educational support toward attaining higher education. A lifelong resident of Massachusetts, he has continued to live in Amherst since graduation and is now a home owner on Butterfield Terrace.

If elected, a top priority will be to reduce the unduly high cost of public university education for the low and middle income student. "It is wrong for low income student to be denied the opportunity for advanced education because of total lack of funds. It is also wrong for the middle income student to be forced into economic hardship while attempting to finance a quality education. In both cases higher education has been priced out of their market," Collins asserted.

He continued, "The recent focus on tuition and tuition increases is largely a bogus issue. The heart of the matter is high room, board, and fee costs, as well as too little scholarship and work study funds. If the present amortization period of twenty years for financing dormitories were to be extended to fifty years--the normal life of such buildings--the student's rent could be halved." Collins also believes that all tuitions should go into a general scholarship fund, instead of into the Commonwealth's general treasury, as now is the case.

Collins is vitally concerned with tax reform for working people who pay most of the taxes at both the state and Federal levels and receive the least from their tax dollars. He is in support of the graduated and progressive income tax proposal scheduled for a referendum vote on the November ballot. He believes that the needs of the working man and woman at the University and throughout the district were further disregarded when state employees were recently deprived of their promised four per cent pay raise. "It is unjust," Collins concluded, "that the average wage earner is singled out and forced to bear the brunt of fighting inflation." Collins will seek a fair schedule of pay raises for all University and state employees.

Regarding his candidacy, Collins said: "I will seek the active support of all members of the University community who want a truly responsive representative. One by listening and then acting on the concerns of every person--whether she or he studies or works at this university, will the representative adequately serve the University community."

At the same time, he condemned the prevailing attitude in Boston which, he said, holds that Western Massachusetts really doesn't count. Collins added that people in this part of the state "must gain control of their own lives."

Collins plans to speak on all the issues on every part of the campus and throughout the district during his campaign. During the coming months before the September 19th primary, he will go door to door in the seven towns of this district and will "work hard to earn the endorsement of Democrats and Independents in September. We shall then work equally as hard to win a Democratic victory in November."

James G. Collins has announced his candidacy for State Representative from this district.

"We need a strong voice from the campus and this district in Boston," Collins concluded. "With such a voice for all the people, I shall endeavor to bring the quality of life our society is capable of providing to all the citizens of our district."

Anyone seeking further information or desiring to help in the campaign may call Collins at 549-6886.

Tuition And Fees To Increase

Higher tuition for all in-state undergraduates and increases in room and telephone fees at the Amherst campus have been voted by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees.

Tuition will go up 50 per cent over the next two years, rent for most of the rooms at UMass Amherst will go up $30 per year and the fee for telephones in rooms at Amherst will be raised from $25 to $38 per year. All of the increases take effect September 1 of this year.

The tuition increases follow recommendations made April 8 by the board chairmen and chief executive officers of the major segments of public higher education and by the Board of Higher Education. The tuition for in-state undergraduates, now $200 per year, will go to $250 this September and to $300 in September of 1973, a 50 per cent increase over the two years.

The room rent increase at the Amherst campus will affect all students living on campus except those in the Sylvan Area, a three-building complex for 1400 where rents are at the top rate of $700 per year and will remain there.

All other rents will go up $30 per year. In the newer residences in the Orchard Hill and Southwest Areas, and in three renovated buildings in other areas, rents that are now $610 per year will go up to $640. In all other buildings, rents that are now $550 per year will go up to $580. The renovated buildings are Lewis, Thatcher and Chadbourne.

Amherst Community Fair

The Amherst Fair is held each year on the Amherst common in the center of town. This year the fair, which is coordinated by Alpha Phi Omega of the University of Massachusetts, will be held on Friday, May 12, and Saturday, May 13. The fair features rides on the midway and various booths.

The schedule of events is:

Friday, May 12
12:00 noon - 4:00 pm - Set up booths
3:00 - 12:00 pm - Rides are open
3:00 - 12:00 pm - Booths are open
6:30 pm - Crowning of queen
7:00 pm - Band concert

Saturday, May 13
9:00 am - Meet at A.R.H.S. for parade
10:00 am - Parade starts at High School and ends at Amherst Common
10:00 am - 11:00 pm - Rides and Booths are open
1:00 pm - Pet parade (meet at Parking Lot between Fair and Booksale)
2:00 pm - Band Concert

Again, this year there will be a sidewalk sale by area merchants and a book sale by the League of Women Voters.

Modular Buildings Approved

Four modular buildings to supplement academic classroom and office space at UMass were approved Wednesday, May 10, by the UMass Board of Trustees meeting in Amherst.

The buildings, ranging in size from 8,000 square feet to 30,000 square feet, will be used to relocate personnel and facilities in older University buildings which will be renovated and remodeled, and to allow more space for some academic departments. Hanley Structures, Inc. of Tennessee will build the modular facilities and Barnes and Jarnis, Inc. of Boston will do the engineering for the general construction contract, and Per Bylen of Duxbury will do the landscape and site design.

By early spring of the next academic year, 1972-73, the buildings will be ready for occupancy. It will be the largest set of classroom and office modular buildings ever assembled. Mental Health personnel will move into an 8,000 square foot building near the University Health Center and nearby will be a 12,000 square foot facility for academic use.

Near the School of Education building will be 10,000 square feet of modules to increase space for that School. And in the former lacrosse field near Boyden Physical Education building will be the largest of the modular buildings--30,000 square feet.

A $2 million State appropriation will buy the buildings, install them on the campus, and furnish them.

Oceanographers Drill In Arabian Sea

BOSTON (AP) — An international team of oceanographic scientists Wednesday reported experimental drilling in the floor of the Arabian Sea penetrated deeper than anywhere in the world-4,262 feet under the ocean floor.

The record depth was at a site in the northwest section of the sea under 11,610 feet of water.

The report also disclosed finding an area in the Red Sea of hot brine pools with underlying sediments containing gold, silver, copper, lead and zinc.

The expendition discovered a submarine ridge at least 300 miles length off the coast of southeast Arabia, and indications the origin of the Red Sea was more complex than believed previously.

The findings were announced at the Museum of Science by officials of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute, which participated along with Columbia, University of Miami, University of Washington and Scripps Institute of Oceanograph, LaJolla, Calif.

The work was done on the drilling research vessel Glomar Challenger, with an international team of scientists aboard. It was the 23rd leg of a series of underwater drilling experiments that have continued several years. The 24th leg has already begun, this one in the Indian Ocean.

The Glomar Challenger, owned by Global Marine Inc., Los Angeles, is a 400-foot vessel displacing 10,000 tons with a million-pound hook load capacity drill derrick 194 feet above the surface of the water.

The report said the sediments containing traces of valuable minerals-deep under the sea-were traced down to a depth of 10 meters, but the drills could go no deeper because of a layer of basalt, a hard, dense volcanic stone.

However, the team estimated the sediments, if they could be mined and refined, might produce minerals worth $2.4 billion.

A Statement On Duty

By GILBERT J. SALK

I represent three of the more than 450 arrests which have taken place at Westover AFB during the past three weeks. I reported for trial at Chicopee District Court on the morning of May 10, expecting to be tried, to make a statement about why I have helped organize, and participated in, the non-violent civil disobedience at the base. I intended to base my defense strictly on moral grounds, for my participation was, and is, on the basis of obedience to a Law higher than civil law.

Our case was continued for two weeks, and it appears that the legalities of the case are such that the charges may be filed. I am concerned that if this happens your readers may feel that the original act was committed with this end in mind. In fact, each of us participated with the full knowledge that we might go to jail for our act of protesting both american and vietnamese deaths.

My next step, out of consideration for the cost of the demonstrations to the City of Chicopee and out of a belief that a more direct nonviolent confrontation with the death machine is needed, will be to commit nonviolent civil disobedience on the base, on federal property, so that the costs will be borne by the instigator of the need for the act.

I would also like to share with you the statement I planned to make in court:

"After WWII, this nation participated in the prosecution, imprisonment, and execution of germans who followed orders, obeyed civil laws, and ignored the realities of the war crimes in which Germany was involved. We contended that the german people should have disobeyed orders, broken laws, and forced confrontation with reality. We claimed that the germans had a duty to recognize and obey a higher law which superceded any civil laws.

"If I ignored the participation of my nation in a horrible war--as all wars must be--or failed to force others to confront the realities of this war, or allowed obedience to civil law to prevent my obedience to the law of brotherhood, then I would be as guilty as those germans.

"But I feel the deaths of Vietnamese at the hands, guns, napalm, and bombs of americans; of americans at the hands of vietnamese; and of vietnamese at the hands of vietnamese. I feel these people--white, black, yellow--as my brothers and sisters, and I feel their deaths as I read the morning papers, eat their deaths with the evening news, dream their deaths in my sleep, vomit their deaths a thousand times a day. I hear death touted as the way to life, war extolled as the road to peace, villages destroyed to be saved, fighting continued to save POWs while more men become POWs--or MIAS--or corpses.

"And I hear an insane president invoke the name of God to justify his killing of men, while God has said, "Thou shalt not kill," while Christ has said, "Love thine enemy as thy-self," while Gandhi has taught 'satyagraha"--truth force--, while King's dream struggles to become a reality, while Berrigan burns papers to protest the burning of children, while I sit in a roadway to say no to the machinery of death.

"I do not, cannot, condone the killing done by the vietnamese, for evil they do is no less than the evil being done by right of that government to claim my support or demand my obedience to its laws while it kills in my name.

"When laws come in conflict, lesser laws must defer to higher laws. The laws which demand that I do all in my power to say no to killing, to say no to war, to say no to hatred, are superior to any man-made laws. There is no guilt attached to breaking civil law in obedience to these laws, nor is there shame in accepting civil punishment when justice fails during the confrontation of civil and moral law.

"I will not pay a fine--my conscience cannot be bought and sold. Regardless of the findings of this court, I am not guilty. I stand for judgement before God and men of conscience, and I know that I am innocent. Thank you.

"Peace."

Look To Yourselves

It is an unfortunate characteristic of bureaucracies that they must create political scapegoats at regular intervals to rationalize their proceedings. A prime example of this type of injustice exists within the Economics Dept. of this university, whose annual purge has centered itself around Professor Michael Best for the second year in a row.

Best, lauded by most of his students and associates, is being sacrificed in the name of competency for his political views. It is ironic that the criteria used to judge Best's competency, based largely on analysis of his publications for internal inconsistencies, would disqualify his critics were the same criteria applied to their early dissertations. How, we ask, can men whose work is testimony of their own incompetency feel capable of passing judgment on another's work.

Those members of the Economics Department who have condemned Best as an economist and scholar would do well to look to themselves before their own dirty laundry is hung before the eyes of the university community at large. It appears as though the department has set itself a goal of planned obsolescence; if they ever break out of the narrow confines they have made for themselves, they may find that there simply aren't enough Mike Bests to go around.

Bill Manburg

For Whom Do You Speak?

Contrary to the efforts of many UMass students the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees took some very significant action yesterday. First ROTC will be stripped of all academic credit beginning in 1972 unless it can meet the University requirements, which doesn't seem very likely. There will be no on-campus recruiting in Boston next year and no secret or classified research will be accepted on either the Amherst or Boston campuses. Only reserach that can be fully disclosed and its scope and methods available for review will be accepted. The Board also voted to support the Brooke amendment to cut off funds from Vietnam by August 31.

After remarks by the University President, Chancellor Bromery, and a representative of the UMass Amherst Faculty Senate it was time for the students to speak. First to speak was a representative of the Marketing Club. Citing a poll recently conducted in the Collegian, he expressed his belief that most UMass-Amherst students favor on-campus recruiting. His facts and his presentation were ridiculed by some of the audience, but they had no facts to substantiate their beliefs.

Representatives from the Center for Social Change, who sought to speak for all students, but who in actuality spoke only for themselves, spoke next. Using rhetoric that inspired only themselves, saying nothing new or citing no basis for widespread student support, no matter how right and morally correct their words indeed were, they impressed few people. If it weren't for the cause they support, that being the end of the Vietnam War and the demilitarism of this country, they wouldn't have a platform to speak on.

The ROTC representative, rehashing arguments from the past, a mishmash of ideas carefully developed over years of military indoctrination and propaganda was taken for exactly its worth by the Board of Trustees. They took away academic credit.

After representatives from the Boston campus spoke, the Board finally got around to voting. But the actions voted on by the trustees weren't good enough for the representatives from Boston and the Center for Social Change. Boston students wanted to rid the whole University system of the evils of recruiting, even though Amherst students weren't very sympathetic to their cause.

What can be learned from yesterday's experience? First, I would like to know what the Center for Social Change is, and for whom do they speak? Secondly, more hard work and less emotional rhetoric is now needed to push to greater breakthroughs concerning the militarism in this country in the future. And finally Amherst students can't speak for Boston students, and conversely Boston student can't speak for Amherst students. The action taken by the Board of Trustees was significant and important. The precedent has been started, the military, in the form of ROTC, will be leaving this campus soon.

Al Lowenstein, School of Education Fellow, former Congressman, and organizer of the "dump Johnson" movement, is running for Congress again. His opponent is Congressman John J. Rooney, a persistent hawk and the best friend the F.B.I. has in Washington. Not surprisingly, the powers that be are making things as difficult as possible for Lowenstein.

The New York State Legislature, controlled by Nelson Rockefeller and his friends, has redistricted the city in an unbelievable fashion. Bella Abzug and William Fitts Ryan, two of the more outspoken anti-war people, have been moved into the same district.

Lowenstein has been endorsed by both the Reform Democrats and the Liberal Party. He is running a strenuous campaign, an organized coalition with blacks, Puerto Ricans, and reformers participating. He is a also working with the McGovern people in the 14th Congressional District, which will send five delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

As he always does, Lowenstein is relying heavily on students in his campaign. Most of the staff already in Brooklyn is composed of students, many of whom have taken time off from school to work for him.

The district has many poor people, and all the problems of a modern city. Rooney is generally an invisible man whenever anyone needs help from their Congressman. Lowenstein is attempting, during the primary campaign, to aid these people as though he were their Congressman already. Lowenstein is not your typical politician, and his campaign reflects it. Lowenstein workers will be helping people to paint houses, to organize Community Action Programs, and to handle the heroin problem.

This election is of crucial importance. Should Nixon get re-elected, which appears very possible if the Democrats nominate Humphrey, the only way to end the war will be in Congress. Rooney has voted against every attempt to end the war in Congress. Lowenstein has spent more time trying to end the war than anyone else in this country.

Many student volunteers are needed. Lowenstein doesn't amass huge war chests; his major source is people. In order to do all that he wants to do, he needs students to come to Brooklyn to work in the campaign. On the UMass campus, Kathy Hershcopf is coordinating volueers. If you can help, for a day or until June 20, sign up at the tables in the Campus Center. Students from New York who could help house other volunteers are particularly needed.

Sign up or call Kathy at 6-8181. We need you.

The Crazy Man

By JIM MORAN

The initial shock is beginning to wear off. I'm beginning to let myself believe that there is going to be a tomorrow. After having said good-bye to every living thing in sight Monday night and early Tuesday morning, I am beginning to believe that rational men will step in and save us...from the crazy man.

The crazy man scared men. Two years, ten days ago, I got out of the Navy, and I sincerely believed that I left all the crazy people in the world behind me. But then I had to watch television Monday night and I couldn't turn it off.... I saw the crazy man.

He was sitting there as demure and solemn as a minister at an execution His jowls were flapping up and down and he was telling us that he was going to mine a harbor; that he was giving the world three days to be out of a country, that he was going to starve and bomb some poor bastard into salvation.

He was sitting there and telling us that he was going to do all this shit and that it was right.

.....He really believes that he is right....

I thought I had left all the crazies behind; the people who could rationalize Calley, or some rotting body of a child in a ditch. The people who could rationalize this bullshit after seeing it, even the nuts who only get commissioned never elected.

And yet I saw it. I saw this crazy man get on television and tell the world to go to hell because he was going to have an honorable peace whether any living creature would be alive to enjoy it or not.

Does he really think that the rest of the world is going to sit by and let him mine a harbor and destroy a nation? Is he so goddam egotistical as to think that he is J.F.K. keeping the Russians out of Cuba?

Christ! Some one please tell him that this kind of Manifest Destiny went out with Teddy Roosevelt. That the Madonna and Child is not some plastic doll sold in dime stores, but real flesh and blood people with slanted eyes and yellow skin.

I escaped to the safety of the Quicksilver, where I fully expected to meet people concerned with what had just taken place. It was just like any other night. The man had told his story about his plan for peace and honor in the world. All the chicks and heads were dancing it up like it never happened. Maybe they are right. Maybe if we ignore him he will go away. Maybe if we do, we will all get blown away.

I had hoped to end this form of intercourse with you, that I have enjoyed for the past two years, on a positive note. With George McGovern going so strong, I think I can. He is not our only hope, but to know that he is there, provides a comforting thought. I just hope that we can all hang on till next November.

I just hope that the crazy man can fake out the Russians long enough until more rational men can come in and take over.

Peace...see you in the real world.

No Magician

To the Editor:

I appreciated reading Don Glickstein's personal views about the School of Education in last Friday's Collegian. His candor and insight were refreshing, and I feel that his evaluation of the School was constructive. However, one predominant image in his article is that of Dwight Allen as a magician--who has squeezed one hundred faculty slots out of funding for twenty, who has pulled endless strings of imaginative innovations out of a hat, who has twisted the bars of beaurocracy into pretzels.

Unfortunately, this magicians' image, while entertaining, obscures the fact that the accomplishments of the School of Education under Dean Allen are not mere tricks and illusions. Beneath the glitter, a great deal of progress has been made on important and substantive educational issues.

In fact, the School of Education as a whole is dealing with the three crucial issues that any traditional institution which is expanding its activities to cope in a meaningful way with today's problems must solve: resources, diversity, and dissent.

The School of Education as an institution has achieved the phenomenal expansion in resources and personnel that is necessary to support any major attack on current problems in society. The number of graduate students enrolled in education has tripled since Dean Allen came. In the last five years, the number of hard money faculty positions at the School has almost doubled, and the total number of faculty positions has almost tripled. The Schools' soft money funding has increased from $500,000 in 1967-68 to $3,500,000 in 1970-71. Given the economic crises of the last several years, few universities in the country can boast of a department that has achieved a similar expansion.

The School of Education has also modified its recruitment and admissions criteria so that it can achieve the diversity in backgrounds, races, and sexes mandatory for a meaningful understanding of the roots of today's crises. No graduate school in the country has more minority graduate students than the School of Education (which has over 150), and all centers at the School have pledged to commit 50% or more of their admissions slots for next year to minority students and women. All new faculty positions at the School of Education are being filled by minority or women candidates.

The graduate student population now at the School spans a wide variety of backgrounds and experiences, including many excellent students whose credentials are not sufficiently traditional for admission to graduate work in other departments and universities. The largest off-campus endeavor of the School, the Career Opportunities Programs in Brooklyn, Springfield, and Worcester, provides over three hundred poor and minority undergraduates professional opportunities in urban education that would otherwise be denied to them. These COP programs are especially important in that they are not merely examples of special funding or University outreach to minorities, but because they are important new models for designed teacher training programs which are co-operative efforts of schools of education and school districts.

Any institution which has made inroads on the problems of resources and diversity must face the issue of dissent, for diversity necessarily breeds different conceptions of what the current crises in our society are and what actions are needed for their solution. The School of Education has consistently attempted to modify its institutional processes to reflect the viewpoints of the many different groups working within the School.While this process of institutional evolution to reflect the real disagreements of diverse groups has frequently been difficult and hazardous, the models for change that the School is painfully working out are invaluable guideposts to the processes that all of our societal structures will eventually have to go through to achieve meaningful channels through which dissent can be transformed into change.

Because the School of Education has confronted and is solving these three crucial problems, it has achieved far more than becoming a magical oasis of freedom and innovation in the wastelands ofeducation. The School as an institution is evolving models for dealing with the three crucial problems that every institution in this university should be confronting, and as long as the rest of the university persists in ignoring the School's models for change by concentrating on the glitter or the hazards, the other institutions within the university will continue to be unresponsive to the major problems of our society.

Inconclusive?

To the Editor:

Now that the results of the ROTC petitioning have been released (Collegian, May 8), it seems clear what the consensus of opinion is on this campus. Anyone who had a strong opinion, pro or con, signed the appropriate petition. Whether the signers were undergraduates, graduate students or faculty seems inconsequential to me. For these reasons, I disagree with Dave Booker, who said the results cannot be taken as conclusive, and with Larry Ladd, who said the results of the petition are inconclusive.

I feel that ROTC should remain on campus for the simple reason that students who want to participate in the program are free to do so and those who don't are not obligated to participate. Furthermore academic credit should continue to be granted ROTC courses, as long as Witchcraft, Karate, Auto Mechanics, Guitar and other Southwest Colloquia continue to receive academic credit.

I wonder if the results of the petition had been 55% against ROTC, rather than in favor, whether Larry Ladd would still say that campus opinion is very mixed and not clearly in one direction.

Totally Unwarranted

To the Editor:

Three comments on the Westover demonstrations:

I deeply regret the tone and content of Steve Masse's letter to the Collegian published yesterday entitled "Cops 'n Perverts". It is a dehumanizing parody of the Chicopee Police, totally inaccurate and self-indulgent. Easy laughs at the Archie Bunkers on the force, I suppose was the intention. The spirit of the letter violates the spirit of our demonstrations in refusing to respect the humanity of everyone involved. I have talked with a dozen different officers on the Chicopee Police Force. In no case was there any basis for the kind of caricature which Mr. Masse contributed and to which the Collegian regrettably gave top-billing. How can students and police (much less demonstrators and police) get beyond their stereotypes of one another to a fuller human understanding and respect if mean-spirited parody is the idiom in which we deal with each other.

A word of thanks to those who have joined and supported our series of non-violent protests at the Main Gate of Westover Air Force Base. In particular, to those who participated last Thursday and contributed to a fund intending to compensate the clerk/secretaries in the Judge's office for their unpaid overtime labor after 4 P.M., let me explain the disposition of the money. The women in question felt that they could not accept it, although they understood and appreciated the intention of our gesture. The funds were then given to Bill Norris, who has served as legal counsel for every demonstration so far without compensation. Additional contributions to help Bill meet the expenses of court-work may be made by writing a check to: "Valley Peace Center-Westover Defense Fund" and mailing it to V.P.C., 1 Cook Place, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Lastly, the demonstrations will continue, as does the heavy bombing in Indochina. Raids in North Vietnam seem likely to become more intense and genocidal. Therefore we plan to be at the Westover main gate on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 7:15 A.M. and Saturdays at :) A.M. with protest meetings and non-violent civil disobedience as we have been ten times over the past two weeks. Practice sessions for potential participants in civil disobedience will be held Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays from 7:30 to 9:30 P.M. at the First Congregational Church in Amherst.

Editorial Points

It isn't raining rain, you know, it's raining depressed spirits.

Some will give the Board of Trustees credit for stripping ROTC of credit. Maybe even enough to get them promoted.

Have you ever wondered where the water from the campus goes? You haven't? Well start thinking about it before it's too late.

Who Loses?

To the Editor:

When negotiations between the Steering Committee of the Third World Caucus of the School of Education and the Negotiating Team of the School of Education were broken off by the Steering Committee, who lost?

Whatever the problems of the on-campus component of the COP program, up to late Monday night, there still was a possibility for resolving issues and solving conflicts for the benefit of all involved. By pushing the situation past the point of any feasible solution, the Steering Committee has lost sight of the interests of the on-campus COP students. Who lost?

After the dust settled over Ocean Hill-Brownsville, who won? Some community leaders had gained national prominence; the union had maintained its power position. Students in the public schools had lived through a year of chaos and had missed opportunities for learning. Who lost?

In Philadelphia, during the power struggle between John Bremer, Director of Parkway, and Superintendent Mark Shedd, who won? Bremer had to leave, Shedd was eventually ousted, and the students and parents who had helped build a pilot elementary branch of Parkway found their school closed down. Who lost?

Power struggles are an inevitable reality in any bold educational reform venture. Tragically, as such struggles develop, too often the end product becomes lost. Too often minorities have ended up fighting minorities, leaving untouched the larger issues of white racism. If the issues presented by the Third World Caucus of the School of Education in the Daily Collegian were acceded to, who would lose? White faculty and students would remain untouched, while minority students, staff, and faculty would be asked to submit to an additional set of criteria and controls. Who would lose?

Finally, if these issues and this negotiation becomes the cause of the resignation of Dean Dwight Allen, who would lose?

Nature Is Also Rickets

To the Editor:

I feel that Mr. Dupre's attack upon Dr. Clydesdale deserves a rebuttal--but I feel that such a defense should come not from a food scientist but rather from a scientifically uneducated person who attempts to decipher the rationality in each argument.

Dr. Clydesdale has a problem; so does Dr. Francis and Dr. Nawar--they're all food scientists. They have spent their lives researching foods, chemicals, food industries, world nutritional problems, and they have approached these problems with a wealth of knowledge accumulated over many years of study. It is important to realize that despite their idiosyncracies, these professors mean well--they are determined to contribute to the advancement of more and better food in the future.

The problem develops when John F.S. Doe becomes interested in the food industry. The F.S. stands for his newly acquired middle name, Food Scientist. He automatically grants himself the degree (and knowledge) of a food scientist--a pseudo-food scientist, if you will. Immediately, John is as equipped to study foods as are those who may not have the answers, but at least have the necessary tools with which to deal with the problems. John feels he can now abandon scientific exploration and instead cry to the public to protest those mysteriously unknown and unpronounceable words called "ingredients" (i.e. unknown and unpronounceable to him). In an age when a protest rally carries more significance than a laboratory experiment, John tries to convince his listeners that man is sinful from birth and only Nature is good. Well, John, nature is alsorickets. skin diseases, and totally infected bodies.

I am not a food scientist--but if I were one, I, like Professor Clydesdale, would be immeasurably frustrated if chemical engineers told me how to explore my area of science. I too would be disturbed if others denounced those "dirty" words like "diethylstilbestrol", "monosodium glutamate", etc., etc., --and denounced these terms simply because of personal fear, contempt and overwhelming scientific ignorance.

Dr. Clydesdale's problem is obvious--it appears that his entire education in food technology (and a truly impressive one) is now worthless--everyone has reached his level of knowledge without all those ridiculous years of study, experimentation, and scientific reasoning. Moreover, it is understandable that he would be upset over such potentially dangerous actions as Adelle Davis' inaccurate statements and Carl Dupre's misleading ones.

Lawyers and engineers certainly don't have the answers to the current world problems of caloric and protein deficiencies. Neither do the food scientists. But let's face it: If our food scientists get disgusted with the scientifically absurd rhetoric of the semi-intellectuals and say "We've had we.

Mincing Symbols With Reality

To the Editor:

Last Friday I was thumbing through South Hadley to the entrance to the Mass. pike when a car heading toward Westover Air Force Base stopped to pick me up. Inside the car were three women, wives of enlisted men at Westover. I asked them what they thought of the civil disobedience actions that had been taking place there during the past week. From their replies, I realized very quickly that they were angry, and a bit confused. But the points they raised were quite valid, in fact, what they said helped me to crystalize some questions I had asked myself, concerning the Westover actions.

Their main question was "why Westover?". And so I gave them my "rap" about Westover's involvement in the air war over Southeast Asia, Westover as a part of the U.S. military etc., etc.. They listened, then they talked. They couldn't relate their involvement, their life style at Westover to any larger system of oppression. These conceptions, to the, seemed fantastic. They spoke of their jobs at Westover, and a way of life which they happened to like. I learned that Westover was involved in the air war in Indochina, but not to such a great extent. Two years ago the federal government moved to close Westover Air Force Base, but through the efforts of the people at Westover, wishing to keep their community intact, and the city of Chicopee, Westover remained open. Again they asked, "Do you want Westover closed?" I assured them that the actions at Westover were, for the most part, symbolic-a bearing witness against the war, especially the killings on both sides. One wife said suddenly how she had close friends in other branches of the military, on active duty in Vietnam and she felt that if it came down to a question of whose life was more important, in a situation of survival, there would be no doubt in her mind whom she would want killed. Again there was no question of the validity of situations created by a government, or of the government itself, the end result of which was her friend's being in Vietnam. It was difficult mincing symbols with people who dealt with realities.

By the time the Westover women let me off at the ramp to the Mass. pike several thoughts, questions were in my mind. One was the huge disparity in priorities as to lifestyles existing between the people demonstrating outside Westover and those living on the inside. I remembered people I had known in high school who had enlisted in the armed forces, who were from lower-middle and working class backgrounds, who were attracted to the promise of good pay, technical training and job security. It also seems to me that the people engaging in the civil disobedience are preoccupied with the war as a single issue, divorcing the anti-war issue from its link wity the military structure, a structure which draws its manpower from black communities, from working-class communities, from the larger social and economic system which uses this military structure to secure its hegemony over other people, especially non-white people. The people CDing at Westover are very much caught up with the humanistic tradition behind civil disobedience, and are ignoring the circumstances which bring acts of civil disobedience into existence.

Let me finish by saying that, although I do support the actions taken at Westover, I deplore the lack of political analysis, which would, I feel, give the Westover actions a deeper meaning.

Thank You, Concert Workers

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to a number of people who were crucial to our effort to stage this year's Spring Concert.

Without the support of all these people, this effort would not have been successful. These people suffered through many delays and aggravations, yet stayed with the job to the end.

In particular, I would like to thank the Amateur Radio Club for their valuable assistance. Special people to me and the Committee were: Jeff Willner-Stage Manager; Gary Gomes-clean-up organizer, and one of the original tri-Chairpeople who helped us through the initial hassles; Mitch Press-Dressing Room Security. Extra special thanks go to Jill Cochrane and the Student Activities Staff for aiding us in making our plans work and fighting some of our most important battles.

We'll be doing it again next year, so if you want to come along, you're all invited--if you help, we'll have an incredible concert.

Indoor Guinea Hen Barbecue

To the Editor:

Once again the dining commons has lived up to its outstanding generosity. What a beautiful idea! An outdoor chicken barbecue (held indoors) with a real half barbecued guinea hen. (Tastes familiar, could be the same chicken we had last week.) Served on paper plates, with plastic utensils were all of the all time favorites. Rolls (two per person, no seconds), brownies (one per person, no seconds), vanilla ice cream (2 ounces, no seconds), a slice of pickle, several slices of carrot and celery sticks, and, of course, the chicken. You were allowed to drink all you wanted (I'm overwhelmed).

It must have been an occasion like this that inspired Charles Dickens to write Oliver Twist (Oliver Twist, however, did not pay around $300. for the honor of being refused seconds.) No seconds, no choice. It sounds totalitarian. What happens if you just can't stand chicken? And why should the dining commons be able to do this? If a meal ticket were voluntary, it would be one thing, but being mandatory, the D.C.'s have the responsibility to provide meals adequate, (possibly pleasing) to their captive audience. There was no fruit offered at the meal, and a few sticks of celery and carrot are not an abundance of vegetables. I believe the D.C.'s should either live up to their responsibilities, or relinquish their stranglehold on the students (perhaps, God forbid, both).

Nader For President?

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter because I have a serious proposal regarding the 1972 presidential election. Perhaps I am overly idealistic and a bit naive, but I believe it is still possible for the people of this country to elect whomever they wish for president, regardless of whether or not that candidate is endorsed by one of the major parties. Coupled with this is another belief of mine that the best person for the job would be one who believes that politicians should be servants of the people and, most importantly, one who is not seeking the presidency at all.

I am advocating that we draft Ralph Nader as our next president. In my estimation he has proven, without a doubt, that he is on the side of the citizens of this country and not that of big business and political machines. I believe he is one public figure whom we can trust and who will always serve our best interests. Consequently, I am urging all those who are interested in making a change in our political structure to join me in writing in the name Ralph Nader for president.

Anti-War Pet Peeve?

SUPPORT NIXON

With two days left as undergrads
There's no more time for Cokes or fads
As the date of May 27 will creep
In quickly--after we reap
The harvests of final exams
And the bombardment of the Vietnams.

They'll be more than one dream
How the end of summer will seem
When we don't return in the Fall
To dear old Herter Hall
To study under Bernhard, Wyman or Bell
Who made UMass learning, oh so swell!

So, for Haiphong and UMass alike, this is it
As Nixon and Commanger do their bit.
But the end result will be the same:
The saved American honor and our diploma of fame.

So, almost Alumni--let's hope for the best
For UMass, for Vietnam and for the rest
Of those places where
Our America does care
To stop aggressive acts
By either war or peaceful pacts.

And perhaps this year's graduating classes
Will quite soon see an end to those masses
Of dead Vietnamese and American men
Who protected us while we did attend
A school of higher learning
To merely study of South Vietnam's yearning
To be Communist-free
With American help--even R.O.T.C.

Thus, May 27th should really be
A day of wonder and joy-free
Thoughts of 60,000 men
Who couldn't attend
Their brothers' or sisters' graduation event
Because of duties that were Vietnam bent!

But alas! we students know
We'll change the world in a voter-blow
By making McGovern or the likes
President--to bring home our Mikes
And Eds--not worried
Of how many more South Vietnamese will be buried
When the Americans leave--
"Cause we're on another anti-war pet peave.

Spring It!

To the Editor:

Letters and poems, over and over again; Spring Day is coming, but when? If only BX and the Spring Day committee could control the weather.

Don't give up though, at last our message seems to have gotten through. The ghost of Metawampe will walk tonight, and tomorrow we rejoice.

Thursday's the day we set aside all our cares and join new and old friends for a few hours of pure bliss. Books and classes are forgotten and we'll relive happier times with people we'll probably never see again. It's really pretty sad thinking about that, but let's enjoy one another while we're still together.

So let's all meet on Thursday, at the Stadium, and have ourselves a ball.

The Montague Plains Controversy

Editor's note:
The following article is from a termpaper written by a student in a new course offered by the Department of Plant and Soil Sciences.

A proposal has been made, to turn Montague Plains into the largest sanitary landfill in the world. This has caused a great controversy between the citizens of Western Massachusetts and Boston, whose trash will fill the dump. The citizens of Western Mass. do not want the sanitary landfill on the Montague Plains, because this area is the recharge area for the State Fish Hatchery Springs, and for ground and surface water supplies. The Montague area's water supplies come from the Montague Wells Aquifer, the Alluvial Lake Aquifer., Lake Pleasant, and Green Pond (see map). These sources of water could become seriously polluted by a landfill on Montague Plains. The Sawmill and Connecticut Rivers could also become more polluted, as the water from the above sources filters down into the rivers. The citizens of Western Mass., are also questioning whether a dump would effect the recharge, thus causing their water supplies to dry up. With so much at stake for the future of the Montague area, close studies ought to be made before a sanitary landfill is allowed on the Montague Plain.

This Montague Plains Controversy has finally brought the porblem of trash disposal to the surface, in Massachusetts. The consequences of different methods of trash disposal have not been studied sufficiently. For the last ten years, Massachusetts has done no research to find alternatives to sanitary landfills. Now, with the state at a point at which it has to make a decision about its rubbish problem, it is my hope along with many citizens, that the state will see the disadvantages of sanitary landfills, and will find an alternative that will not be regretted in the future.

The Montague Plains controversy, which brought this problem out into the open, began in 1969, when the Boston and Maine Railroad proposed the 1,500 acre site as a sanitary landfill. The Montague plains was one of 87 proposed sites, over 50 of which have already been rejected because of ground water problems. The Boston and Maine plan was designed to alleviate Boston's trash disposal problems, and their own financial problems, by compressing Boston's trash and shipping it by rail to the Montague Plains. On the return trips, they would bring back sand and gravel to Boston. The Boston and Maine would be making money from the shipment of the trash and sand and gravel, and also from the sale of the Montague dump site, which they own through a subsidiary, Charlestown Waterfront Inc. Their tracks already pass through the Montague Plains, so there would be no need for the building of

The Department of Public Works, one of the three departments that has to pass the proposal for it to go into effect, is also greatly in favor of the project, for monetary reasons. Boston has a great need for sand and gravel, and the Montague Plains would be a convenient and inexpensive source. The DPW hired the consulting firm, Whitman and Howard, Inc., to study the Montague Plains, to find what effects a sanitary landfill would have on the ground and surface waters. The Whitman and Howard report came out in June, 1971, in favor of the sanitary landfill[1] From the information available, the DPW, the Boston and Maine, and Whitman and Howard are the only sources that have come out strongly in favor of the Montague Plains being used as a sanitary landfill.

The Whitman and Howard report has not been accepted by either the Department of Public Health or Natural Resources, as a sound scientific study. Mr. Charles Kennedy, Director of the State Division of Water Resources, described the Whitman and Howard report as "totally unacceptable" and "that the report left unanswered some very serious questions," 1 The Whitman and Howard report states that Lake Pleasant, which collects runoff and ground water from the Plains, is a summer resort area. This area has not been a summer resort for more than a decade now, but is one of Montague's water supply reservoirs. A report from the Turner's Falls Water Department says that Lake Pleasant has been a water supply for the Montague district since 1886, and that "this lake is strictly spring fed by the vast plains area". 2 Thus one of Montague's reservoirs that could be polluted by a landfill on the plains, was disregarded by Whitman and Howard because of their misrepresentation of information. This does not add to the confidence in their research into the Plains.

F.C. Kaminsky, Associate Professor of Industrial Engineering at the University of Massachusetts, points out that the Whitman and Howard report has a contradiction. The report states that "Montague Plains is a very satisfactory site for a satisfactory landfill and that no serious water pollution need ever occur" 3 but then they placed a statement of caution at the end of the report; "because there are several areas adjacent to the proposed sanitary landfill site which could be seriously effected by ground water pollution from leachates it is strongly advised that further studies be undertaken in all such sensitive areas, to eliminate any doubts as to the probable extent of such pollution."

Dr. Ward Motts, a hydrogeologist from the University of Massachusetts, has done the only extensive report on the Montague Plains, concluding that a sanitary landfill should not be built on the site. Dr. Motts is very critical of the Whitman and Howard report. He feels that it did not deal with environmental damage, which, in Dr. Motts' opinion, would greatly effect the area. "The Montague Plains is a good example of the environment and vegetation to be expected on a hot, dry, gravelly, glacial delta." 5 The plants that grow under these conditions at the Montague Plains are pitch pine, scrub and black oaks, quaking aspen, large toothed aspen, pin cherry, white pine, and bunch grasses. The Connecticut River Watershed Council agrees with Dr. Motts that a landfill would damage the area's environment. The president of this council, in a letter to Governor Sargent, stated that "the gravelly soils of the Montague Plains give rise to a rather special plant community - not unique, but certainly rare in Western Massachusetts. Intrusion by a large-scale dump operation would seriously impair the quality of the natural site. The Plains are considered significant enough to be listed by a National Park Service study as being worthy of preservation."6

This type of topography has lead Warren Johansson, chairman of the division of natural sciences at Greenfield Community College, to believe that shifting sand dunes would develope on Montague Plains if a landfill were built. "The topography, prevailing and shifting wind, sand texture, lack of soil mantle, and vegetational types favor the development of shifting sand dunes, should the fragile cover of Montague Plains be disturbed." 7 Some land has already been destroyed in the river valley from sand and wind, according to Mr. Johansson. This is an aspect that Dr. Motts and Whiman and Howard overlooked.

According to Dr. Motts, there are many aspects that the Whitman and Howard report overlooked. When Whitman and Howard had 12 borings made into the Plains, they only used undetailed drillers' logs, rather than geologic logs that would tell exactly what types of soils were found. Soil types are important to know, in order to judge the permeability of the soil, which allows you to find the rate at which leachate could seep down into the ground water. Dr. Motts explained that "there appear to be no major confining beds of fine grained silt or clay in the Montague delta deposit, a most significant conclusion to this study. Confining beds of low permeability retard and restrict the direct movement of water from the sanitary landfills into underlying aquifers...If leachate occurred through the Montague sanitary landfills absense of confining beds would therefore allow water to rapidly drain from the bottom of the sanitary landfill into the waterbearing zone." 8

Dr. Motts does not feel that the Whitman and Howard report studied the direction of ground water flow accurately. They did not do any borings into the buried valley (see map), which could be an important future source of water. They also said that ground water does not flow directly into Lake Pleasant, which both Dr. Motts and the Turner's Falls Water Department contradict. According to Dr. Motts, contaminated water would flow into at least one of the surrounding water supplies, from any size dump in any part of the Plains. This is because the "potentiometric head (the level to which water rises in a well that penetrates the aquifer) in the Montague Plains deposits is higher than the heads in the surrounding aquifers and the levels of Lake Pleasant and Green Pond." 9

The Whitman and Howard report's answer to the above, is that the dump will not pollute the water, because clay seals will be used, and a close surveillance program will be used to detect any pollution that does occur. The trash will be compressed into solid-waste bales, before it gets on the train in Cambridge which will keep out the surface water. Dr. Motts' report discredits the above statements with examples from landfills in other parts of the country. "Experience has shown that landfills, with or without clay seals, will leak in a humid climate similar to that of Montague." 10 According to Grover Emrich, who has done alot of research and writing on sanitary landfills, clay seals leak because they crack. A clay seal that was used on a sanitary landfill in Lake County, Illinois was found to be unsatisfactory. Clay caps can also leak because of surface runoff erosion. No studies have been done on leachates draining from solid-waste bales, because it is a new process. They would probably produce a leachate with a high concentration of contaminates, Dr. Motts feels. The surveillance program that the Whitman and Howard report mentioned was also discredited by Dr. Motts, who feels that even if they did find that pollution was occurring, they would have the almost impossible task of stopping the pollution.

Besides studying the probable long term effects of a sanitary landfill at Montague Plains, Dr. Motts gave an alternative suggestion; the Whitman and Howard report did neither. Dr. Motts suggested looking into a high temperature incinerator, like the one in Montreal. The operating cost of such an incinerator is $7.00 a ton (compared to $1-3.00 a ton for a sanitary landfill) but if the steam is sold for heating and power generation, the price will be $3.50 a ton. The percentage of combustion is 99.5.

Edmund Scheinost has announced his candidacy for the State House from the Second Hampshire District.

Scheinost Enters Race

Edmund Scheinost of 18-1/2 Alvord St., South Hadley, today announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for a Representative's seat in the Second Hampshire District.

Educated in the Southampton schools, where his family operated a large dairy farm for many years, Scheinost is also a graduate of Smith Vocational School in Northampton and attended the University of Massachusetts.

Mr. Scheinost has been both an elected and ex-official town meeting member, has been a candidate for school committee, was elected and is serving a second five-year term on the South Hadley Planning Board. He is former chairman of that Board. He has represented Area #2 as Director of the Massachusetts Federation of Planning Boards for six years.

Mr. Scheinost has been an active member of the Woodlawn P.T.A. and is also a member of the Mosier School P.T.A. He is Committee Chairman of Cub Scout Pack #33 and has taught Junior High Church School in Granby continuously for more than a decade.

During World War II, Scheinost served with the Air Force, stationed in Italy and is a member of the V.F.W. Post 3104.

Mr. Scheinost is the developer and former owner president of the Green Pine Milk and Ice Cream Company, in South Hadley. After disposing of his interest in the dairy business, he worked for a time with Scott Graphics and also later as a cost accountant with a construction company. He currently is activity therapy attendant for the mentally retarded at the Belchertown State School and holds membership there in the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local #17.

Mr. Scheinost is married to the former Diane Helm of Granby and the couple have five children, Trudy, Debra, Lois, Carl and Kris, all presently attending public schools in South Hadley.

In announcing his candidacy, Mr. Scheinost said, "I feel that my varied background and experience has trained me to relate effectively to the broad spectrum of individuals in the 2nd Hampshire District, from farmer, millworker, businessman and educator as well as those employed by state and municipal governments".

Educational Innovations Center Conducts Summer Camp

In addition to its classroom activities, the CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF EDUCATIONAL INNOVATIONS is conducting, for the second year in concert with community representatives from a number of Massachusetts towns, a summer camp for children from these cities who ordinarily would not have the chance at this kind of experience. Three camps are presently envisioned by the city representatives--one in the Springfield - Holyoke - Chicopee area, one in the New Bedford area and one in the area of Worcester--which will utilize resources solicited by the Office of Senator Edward W. Brooke from OEO, HEW, Department of Labor, and private sources under the auspices of the Domestic Action Program.

The Center for Educational Innovations views their involvement in this program as an opportunity for the School of Education to make a definitive and positive contribution to the education of young people from the urban areas of the Commonwealth. It is our specific responsibility to develop and implement educational programming in the areas of dance, drama, science, mathematics, aesthetics, ecology and language arts, as well as Portuguese and Puerto Rican culture and black studies. These programs, while being broadly educational in nature will hopefully reflect the School's commitment to radical innovations in teaching techniques. The educational content will be conveyed in a manner suitable to a summer day-camp operation.

Those interested individuals should contact them immediately at 545-1592 or in room 221 of the School of Ed. as the selection process is starting on Friday, May 12, at 1:00 P.M. in Room 128, School of Education.

"The Harlem Six" To Speak

The brothers of the "Harlem Six" are, Wallace Baker, William Craig, Ronald Felder and Walter Thomas. They will speak on THURSDAY MAY 11, 1972 at 1:00 p.m. Room 315, New Africa House, and also at 8:00 p.m. S.B.A. Auditorium #120.

The "Harlem Six" were arrested in 1964, and charged with murder in a wild racist atmosphere and railroaded to prison. After serving 8 years and going through 3 trails they were released on bail and are now pending a 4th trial. Two Brothers Daniel Hamm and Ronald Rice are still being held captive in the concentration camps. It is important that concerned brothers and sisters come out and share in what is expected to be an interesting discussion.

Recycling plants seem to be the only other possibility. Walter T. Kostanski, the head of the citizen committee called DUMP (Don't Upset Montague Plains), visited a new recycling plant near Akron Ohio. He was impressed with the efficiency of the plant, which recycles all of its input, except two percent. The plant sorts glasses and metals for recycling, and makes a roofing material from the trash. It also takes trash from the sale of its recycled trash, and also its steam. Recycling plants not only would help with our trash disposal problems, but they can help to preserve our dwindling natural resources. There are some problems with recycling though. Large amounts of manpower are needed to sort materials because our machinery has not developed far enough yet. Also expensive smoke filters are needed because recycling plants do burn some materials. These only seem to be problems that involve money though.

Twins Roll On

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Minnesota Twins, even without ailing batting champion Tony Oliva and with only one homer from Harmon Killebrew, have charged to the major league's best record.

The Twins, who finished 26-1/2 games behind West Division champion Oakland last season after appearing in two straight American League playoffs, had won 12 of their last 14 games going into Wednesday night's contest at Metropolitan Stadium against New York for a 13-4 record and a slight edge in the West over Oakland.

With Oliva on the disabled list while trying to come back from knee surgery, the Twins have come up with three redhot hitters to make up for his absence-Bob Darwin, .343; Steve Braun, .417, and Danny Thompson, .338.

"You couldn't ask any more than what they've done," said Rigney. "They've keyed our attack, and Darwin has carried more than his share of the load."

Darwin, 29, an outfielder who had appeared in only 15 major league games had driven in 20 runs and slammed six homers.

Killebrew, hitting near .300, has driven in 12 runs despite his lone home run.

"Another thing that I've been saying over and over," said Rigney, "is that our starters have got to keep us in a game.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Frances, from Wilmington, Del., jumps on the bandwagon of those who, of late, seem to gain satisfaction from attacking Leo. She writes, "I am a Virgo who has been married to a Leo for 28 years. If I had it to do over, I would never do it. Those years have been miserable for me and for my children. Leo people make you afraid of them as they have a mean temper and will hit you if you don't do as they say."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on finances, protecting gains and inaugurating plans which can increase income. See ahead. Preceive potential. Don't limit yourself. Pay and collect. Take inventory. Know where youstand.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cycle high, take initiative. Put forth new ideas. Stress independence, originality. Judgment, timing and intuition are on target. Step forward. Aim toward future. Stop wondering, brooding about what might have been.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Stay behind scenes. Consolidate position. You require additional information. Look above and beyond what appears on surface. Reject superficiality. Separate fact from illusion. Be very discreet.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on friends, fulfillment of desires. Socialize and make contacts. Gain shown through persons who have desire to aid. Be receptive. Toss aide false pride. Leave details to others. Ride with tide.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are able to justify position, demands. Restriction is present, but ultimately will work to your advantage. Aquarian is in picture. Stand tall. Adhere to principles. Someone is making room for you at top.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel is emphasized. You can communicate. Get ideas on paper. Transform thought into programs. Spotlight shines in direction of education. You learn and grow. Gemini individual plays key role.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Gifts are in picture. Financial understanding with partner, mate also grabs spotlight. Taurus person figures prominently. Emotions tend to dominate. Be sure logic is not obliterated. Strive for balance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent on ties that bind, marriage, special relationships. You find truth, pleasant or otherwise. Disillusionment is possible. However, you could also be stronger as result of encountering facts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Work, basic issues dominate. Short cuts will not suffice. Choose quality. Be thorough in learning, applying knowledge. Keep health resolutions. Get sufficient exercise. Break out of any rut.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Sweeping changes could be featured. Be creative. Yesterday's methods will not suffice. Find out where you want to go—and why. Be analytical, especially where your own emotions are concerned. Protect self in clinches.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New approach to family problem is necessary. One who advocates firm hand, iron fist is being foolish and displaying ignorance. Key now is tender loving care and mix ture of maturity experience.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Short journey could play significant role. Stress versatility. Some neighbors, relatives complain. Key is to maintain sense of humor. Let others handle details. Important now to relax and enjoy.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a natural teacher, basically spiritual. You are determined, at times stubborn. You are also passionate, an individual who lives life to the hilt. September will be your most important month of 1972.

Bruins To Try Again Tonight

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The Boston Bruins, coming off a dismal 3-2 defeat at the hands of stand-up goal-tending artist Giles Villemure, will again try to wrap up the series tonight on Madison Square Garden ice.

What the Rangers did in Thursday nights third period will definitely boost the Rangers morale. Down 2-1 in the final stanza, they rallied behind a pair of goals by Bobby Rousseau and Vilemure's robberies. To say he was outstanding would be an understatement. Villemure was unreal, especially in the final moments when the Bruins swarmed around the net. He remained cool under the tremendous pressure, and when he ended the game still alive, his teammates mobbed him.

With his two third-period goals, Rousseau broke a 22 game scoring slump against the Bruins while, at the time, Phil Esposito continued his scoreless streak in this series with 8 shots and nothing to show for them last night.

Eddie Johnston, the Bruins answer to the stand-up goalie, played a more than adequate game stopping Ranger breakaways left and right. Hopefully, Johnston will remain in the net for Boston against probable New York starter, Villemure and the fans will be treated to round 2 of the stand-up goaltenders duel and maybe, the Brickwall around the Ranger goal will disappear.

Council Changes - Don't Rob UMass Athletics

By BOB ESTELLE

There has been a lot of controversy over the past few months over the Athletic Department and, in particular, the Athletic Council. These charges have been brought about by Lee Sandwen, in particular, and the Student Senate, in general. A lot of things have been stated and implied but I do not feel that the whole story has yet been presented to the students, faculty and staff and, in writing this, I am attempting to bring to light some facts about the Athletic Council that, because of the content of past articles written in the COLLEGIAN, the average student has not been aware of.

My source of information is Mr. Evan Johnston (Class of '50) who currently works in Continuing Education, but for 12-1/2 years he was the Executive Vice-President of the Associate Alumni and served on the Athletic Council. I asked him about these charges I have read about and what follows are his answers to these charges.

The first is an implied charge that the Athletic Council doesn't want more student representation. If this is so, then why did they vote to add two more students last September? The only reason the two students were not added is that the Faculty Senate did not approve this.

The second is that the Athletic Council has closed meetings. According to Mr. Johnston, this is an outright lie! Any interested person can come to the meetings.

The third is that before their meetings, the Athletic Council has a dinner in the Top-of-the-Campus Restaurant with an open bar. Articles written in the past have implied that these dinners are paid for out of the Athletic Fee students pay each year. While it is true that council members have these dinners, they are not paid for out of student fees. They are paid for out of an expense account given to the Dean of the School of Physical Education. Mr. Johnston says that the rationale for having these dinners is that the faculty and alumni members of the council are not being paid and are spending time away from their homes and families to come over here for evening meetings. The dinners are offered as compensation to these people. In telling me this, Mr. Johnston added that these people work to build up the athletic program in many ways. Examples of this are: 1) buying season tickets for football and basketball games. 2) purchasing advertisements in football and basketball programs. 3) helping to recruit athletes. I say that if the officers of the Student Senate are going to receive monetary compensation, because of the time and energy that they spend, these people on the Athletic Council ought to be compensated in some way. And it doesn't hurt the student because he/she doesn't pay for it.

Right now, I would like to explain what the Athletic Council is, what it does, and where our athletic fee goes. The Athletic Council is a committee of the Faculty Senate and what it does is recommend policy concerning athletics to the Board of Trustees. Yes, it does set up the budget for the Athletic Department but this has to be approved by the Board of Trustees. The Board of Trustees also sets the Athletic Fee which is used for: 1) paying for football, basketball and hockey tickets so that a student can go to a game for free. 2) the purchase of uniforms, equipment and other apparatus. It also pays for Intramural Supervisors and Intramural Officials. Incidentally, students at a lot of other colleges and universities do not have the same priviledges that we have as far as getting to see football, basketball, hockey and other University teams for free. I might also add that the Athletic fee is very low, considering all it pays for and that it does not pay for athletic scholarships, loans or grants-in-aid to athletes. The money for that comes from 1) gate receipts 2) concessions sold at football, basketball and hockey games 3) money derived from profits earned by the vending machines locates in the dorms and academic buildings.

Another charge I would like to answer to is the notion that the money allotted to the Athletic Department should be spread out a little more equally. That is, since women make up 44% of the student population, women's athletics should get 44% of the money allotted to the Athletic Department. Advocated of this do not realize that it costs a lot more to run men's athletic programs than women's. Mr. Johnston told me that women's athletics needs more money, they have ways in which to ask for it. This is also true of the intramural Department, which incidentally, is one of the best in the country.

I know that by eliminating alumni and adding students to the council, and making the Director of Athletics an ex-officio member of the council, SGA President Larry Ladd hopes to take measures that would ruin the athletic Program here at the University. He wants to take away the sources of money that the Athletic Department now has and see the University grant athletic scholarships on a need basis. It would be a sad thing to see this happen. I see a lot of potential in building up the program to one which can pay for itself, among other things. What has to be done is to withdraw from the Yankee Conference and build a basketball and indoor hockey arena. Withdrawing from the Yankee Conference would enable UMass to bring in more attractive teams. The service academies, Ivy League schools and independents such as Delaware have expressed their interest in playing UMass in football. Schools such as Penn. Villanova, St. John's and St. Bonaventure have all expressed their interest in playing the UMass basketball team. If these two steps were taken, this is something that could very well be. I might also add that if a new arena were to be built, intercollegiate athletics would be the smallest user of it. It can be used for intramurals, concerts, etc. And indoor hockey arena could also be used for intramurals, ice time could also be rented to outside groups, among other things. Another thing is that these things were to happen, and UMass got some good teams in these sports, post-season tournaments, bowl games and television dates can become a reality. These would bring more money into the University and cut down on the need for an athletic fee.

I think that this is really what the students here want and I am appealing to someone to get these things started so that all of what I mentioned can become a reality. I sincerely believe that with proper planning, this will work. As for Larry Ladd's plans for the Athletic Council, it can only lead to the destruction of the athletic, intramural, and physical education programs here at the University.

Sheehy A Whaler

BOSTON (AP) - Tim Sheehy, a three-time collegiate All-American at Boston College, today signed a multi-year contract with the New England Whalers of the World Hockey Association.

The Whalers said Sheehy, a member of the 1972 U.S. Olympic hockey team, had rejected an offer from the Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League to sign with the league that is to begin its first season next fall.

Terms of the contract signed by Sheehy, a forward, were not disclosed.

Sheehy graduated from BC in 1970 following a career in which he scored 185 points, three times was named to the All-American team selected by college hockey coaches and played on a NCAA championship team.

Sheehy, a native of International Falls, Minn., becomes the third player to sign a Whalers contract.

Graduate Senate Elections

The Graduate Senate is holding elections for the positions of President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer during its last meeting of the semester, 7:30 p.m., 15 May, in the Campus Center. The post of President carries a salary equal to that of a Teaching Assistant; the Secretary is paid $2.35 an hour to a maximum of $1,350.00 a year. The Vice-President and Treasurer are NOT paid.

ANY graduate student at UMass, Amherst, can run for any of these positions. Nominations will be accepted until the election takes place. All graduate senators should plan to attend the meeting and exercise their right to vote in this election.

Stickers Topple Lord Jeffs, 7-5

By HAWKEYE MacGILLIVRAY

Refusing to let either the weather or the Amherst college lacrosse team dampen their spirits, Garber's Gorillas did a number on the Amherst Lord Jeffs to the tune of 7-5. The closeness of the score belies the real rempo of the game. The Redmen stickers outshot the Lord Jeffs 54-15, once again proving the old adage that "when it rains, it pours". UMass dominated all aspects of play--out hustling, out shooting, out riding, and even out swearing Amherst in their frustration at not scoring more.

The Jeffs jumped off to an early lead at 7:18 of the first period when their leading scorer, Peters, came in one on one to beat the UMass goalie, Bruce Crawford. At 1:01 of the second period Amherst struck again. This time it was on a man down situation, but the Redmen responded with four straight goals--the first of which coming at 1:21 as Paul Ritch scored assisted by Dwight Bloomquist. The "spaceman" Paul Ritch came back just a minute later to put another one by the Amherst 2-2.

Dwight "Boomer" Bloomquist put the Gorillas ahead 3:02 on a classy pass from 6'5" John Nagle, who has the ability to draw a crowd to him and then find the open man, in this case Bloomquist.

After numerous but frustrated scoring opportunities, Billy Blaustein stole the ball from one of the Jeffs and assisted Paul Ritch in placing another of his "fake high, go low" shots into the net.

The half ended with Lahachina scoring for Amherst, leaving the score at halftime 4-3 Redmen.

The second half got underway with the dynamic duo, John Nagle and Charlie Hardy, combining for a score at 8:11 of the third stanza. Eight seconds later, Paul Ritch scored his fourth goal of the game assisted by Bloomquist.

Amherst responded with one of their won at 10:27 in another man-down situation for the Lord Jeffs to cut the Redmen margin to 6-4.

Charlie Hardy, being his usual hustling self, combined once again with John Nagle who drilled it home at 7:27 of the fourth period. The scoring ended in a fluke Amherst goal at 11:12.

From the UMass point of view, this game was quite frustrating. The Gorillas deominated all facets of play but just couldn't seem to get the ball in the net very often. Hirsch Seidman, looking like last year's All-American and Captain, Lou Marimacci, played well but could only manage to hit the pipe in his scoring attempts. Bob Lindsay was excellent on defense, as was Bruce Crawford manning the Redmen net. Charlie Hardy moved two points closer to Tom Malone's record of 84 points in a season and in general the whole team played very well as individuals but not collectively.

The coaching staff was pleased with the Gorilla's performance but like the rest of the team, was disappointed in the final tally. Since, the game was relatively close, the coaches could not substitute like he might have wanted to if the score had been more one-sided.

Seaver Troubled

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets' Right Arm is having trouble with both legs.

"I just haven't been myself lately because I've pulled muscle fibers in my legs," Tom Seaver revealed Wednesday. "And few people realize how important my legs are to my pitching style."

It was evident that the star right-hander was not in 20-game winning form his last two outings. Both San Francisco and San Diego knocked him out of the box.

"With the soreness in my legs, I'm unable to get them in shape between assignments and it's costing me in the late innings," said Seaver. "I use my legs to push off and to control my pitches.

"But my control is affected and I can't get the ball where I want it to go, especially in the seventh, eighth or ninth innings when my calves really begin to hurt."

Control was the Seaver trademark when he won the Cy Young Award as the National League's best pitcher in 1969 and last year when he led the league in strikeouts and earned run average.

"It's just a matter of not being able to do my homework," said the affable right-hander. "I haven't been able to run as well in between games."

Netsters Lead Springfield - Await NE's

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

In a meager attempt to get back into the swing of things, the UMass tennis team finished half a match vs. Springfield today, and this afternoon, one day before the New England Championships begin, they'll complete that match; that is, of course, if the rain decides to hold up for a few hours this afternoon.

UMass led 3-2 in the singles with fourth singles man Steve Ferber still out fighting the raindrops. The score at the end of the abbreviated match was 6-3, 3-6, 1-1 in favor of, well take your pick.

Coach Kosakowski had been wary of the Chiefs and the fact that UMass gained only three of the five matches indicated that Kosakowski was right on the ball.

Kosakowski, in talking of the upcoming New Englands spoke of Amherst, the team the Redmen took this year, and the hosts for the New England tournament this weekend. "My two biggest wins at UMass have been against Amherst," reflected Kosakowski. "One was beating Amherst college in tennis this year, for the first time. I recall getting kicked off of their court when I was younger and it's really a great satisfaction to win against a team that has housed your back yard courts for years."

Kosakowski, a former hockey coach, spoke of his other "big win." "Beating Amherst coaching hockey was my other great win. The Amherst rink was being dedicated and beating them then was a great thrill."

Speaking of hockey, one of the best-kept secrets in the UMass athletic department has to do with Coach Kosakowski and his hockey coaching prowess. In 1969 Kosakowski was elected to the Collegiate Hockey's Hall of Fame. He is presently one of 38 men in the American Hockey Coaches Association.

The netmen are looking forward to the New Englands anxiously, hoping that they can make the top five. At least that's the feeling among the players. Ted Donahue, a winner against Springfield yesterday, thinks they can. And if Donahue can pull off another of his famous comebacks (like yesterday's when he was down 5-0 in the first set, and won the match 7-5, 6-2) the Redmen might possibly make the top five. Undoubtedly UMass would be picked to finish somewhere near the number 10 slot, so position number five is shooting high.

Other winners yesterday were two more freshmen, in fact all three freshmen won yesterday, while two sophomores dropped their matches. Gary Ney, at second singles, and Robert Schpeiser, at sixth, won in straight sets. Mark Brass and Fred Braley, both one year ahead of Ney and Schpeiser both suffered losses.

For the past two weeks, its been rain, and rain and even at times there's been rain. The netmen have had very, very little chance to practice, in fact besides hitting the ball against the wall (which offers minimal help in keeping in shape) most of the team has picked up a racket for only three of the past 12 days.

An added note: next year's tennis captain was chosen this past week, and Junior Steve Ferber, currently playing fourth singles will be manning that post next year, replacing Senior/Junior Chris Coffin.

Freshman Robert Schpeiser is undefeated in competition thus far. Playing at Number 6, he easily won the Yankee Conference title at that spot.

500 Arrested At Westover

By JIM DEMPSEY

Nearly 500 persons were arrested yesterday morning in a massive non-violent demonstration outside Westover Air Force Base. They were among 1,000 persons gathered at the two main entrances to the base, protesting President Nixon's blockade of North Vietnam and calling for an end to the continued mass slaughter of human beings in Southeast Asia.

Yesterday's demonstration was strictly peaceful, with no incidents of violence, as have been all of the previous daily actions outside Westover during the past three weeks. Yesterday's arrests double the total number of previous arrests there, bringing the total to more than 800.

The larger group assembled outside the Industrial Gate to the base - most of them part of an Amherst College contingent led by the President of the College, John William Ward and his wife, Barbara Ward.

On Wednesday, Ward addressed the Amherst student and faculty body, saying he was "frightened and upset" by what has been happening and that "writing to Congressmen is just not enough."

As a result of the speech, several hundred Amherst students and many faculty members rallied around their resident, either following his lead or supporting his action. However, Ward emphasized that he was acting as a private citizen in expressing his opposition to the war and that each person should do what they feel is best to end the war.

One that has yet to feel the effects. (Photo by Alan Chapman)

Also arrested yesterday were Dean Richard Lyon of Hampshire College and Ms. Cornelia Mendenhall, wife of the President of Smith College and popular anti-war poetess Denise Levertov.

Outside the main gate a brief memorial service calling to mind those who have suffered and died because of this war, in Southeast Asia and at Kent State and Jackson State. Ms. Levertov read three of her poems for the assembly and all were informed of the activation of the mines in the harbors of North Vietnam at 7 AM our time. Ms. Jean Matlick urged people to "use every ounce of strength we have to work for peace."

Then approximately 150 persons moved to block the main gate, forming two circles and blocking all traffic. Cars were backed up for more than an hour.

As the first bus load of demonstrators was leaving, two persons lied down, their heads touching and their hands together, briefly blocking the bus. They were arrested.

Those who remained joined together on one side of the road, while waiting for another bus to take them to the Chicopee courthouse. Police then moved the demonstrators off the road to wait for the bus. The demonstrators then moved back onto the road and sat down together again, singing songs of peace and brotherhood. The police allowed them to stay in the road.

There were about 600 persons outside the industrial gate, of which more than 300 were arrested. President Ward gave a brief statement before he led people onto the road, pointing out that he acted as citizen Bill Ward.

At one point, police began rerouting blocked up traffic down a little-used dirt road near the industrial gate. Several demonstrators then moved to sit down at that entrance. Traffic wasn't flowing again until amost 9 AM.

One person said after the second bus load of demonstrators drove away, that "it didn't even make a dent in the crowd."

Altogether from both gates, there were a total of 9 large yellow school buses, 2 cruisers and 4 vans used to transport the arrested demonstrators to Chicopee.

In Chicopee, the arrested demonstrators waited in the parking lot outside the courthouse for booking. There wasn't enough room inside.

Judge James Landers, ruling over the Westover cases since their beginning, stood on the hood of a school bus to address the crowd, who cheered and applauded him. He jokingly commented that he'd seen several of the demonstrators on other days.

Judge Landers explained that "there will be a problem ad-

Fac Sen Turns Down Athletic Council Change

By DON BISHOP

A motion to amend the constitution of the Faculty Senate by changing the structure and composition of the Athletic Council was in effect defeated at a meeting of the general faculty yesterday afternoon. The proposal would have increased the representation of students on the Council while decreasing that of the Alumni.

No actual vote was taken on the Council re-organization amendment. Rather, discussion of the entire matter was referred back to the Faculty Senate when the general faculty could not agree upon the changes necessary after they changed the original amendment by re-instituting three alumni representative positions on the Council.

A motion to change the purpose of the Faculty Senate was also brought before the faculty and defeated after a relatively brief debate. This amendment would have changed the present wording of the Faculty Senate's purpose from "recommending policies affecting the University as a whole" to "recommending academic policies affecting the University as a whole."

The original amendment to the Athletic Council called for the Council to be composed of six members of the professional staff, the President of the Student Senate, four undergraduates, the Director of Athletics without vote and the outgoing chairman of the Council, who would sit ex officio.

This would have been a marked change from the present structure of the Council, which has four alumni, the Student Government Association President, four faculty members, one administrator, and the Director of Athletics.

At yesterday's meeting, the general faculty accepted an amendment to the original amendment, proposed by Dean Arthur Gentile of the Graduate School, which reinstated three alumni members to the Council. By accepting Gentile's amendment, the faculty forced itself into the position of having also to increase the number of "professional staff" represented on the Council, to keep in accord with NCAA rules.

This was never able to be accomplished at yesterday's session, due to the general state of confusion created by the passage of the alumni-restoring amendment. The entire matter was eventually referred back to the Faculty Senate for reconsideration there, thus killing all hopes of an Athletic Council reorganization for this semester.

The original amendment which had decreased the alumni representation on the Council to one, had already passed two meetings of the Faculty Senate, as is required for an amendment to the constitution. It had been read at a previous "general faculty" meeting. If it had been voted favorably upon at yesterday's session it would have become law.

Debate on the original motion began on an ominous note for the amendment's supporters. Prof. Herbert Spindler related his opposition to the amendment from a prepared statement he read to the faculty.

He stated he was against the idea of giving students a "bloc" vote on the Council for reasons which included his belief that students do not have the experience that alumni do in evaluating athletic programs. Spindler cautioned against passage of the amendment by reading a quote from the late Frank Boyden: "Treat your students like adults, but always remember that they are still children."

Prof. Zena Tillona spoke in favor of the amendment and in rebuttal to the points made by Spindler. She stated that students do have the responsibility andcapabilities to be given the proposed representation on the Council.

Former Ombudsman Ellsworth Barnard also spoke in favor of theoriginal amendment stating that he couldn't see why the alumni should have any more imput into the Athletic program than they do into academic affairs here.

After Barnard spoke, Dean Gentile proposed his amendment to the original amendment calling for the readmittance of three alumni representatives to the Board. Gentile stated that he was not against student representation on the Council (although he also stated his belief that students are not supportive of the Athletic program) but rather he felt that the proposed dropping of the alumni representation from four to one, was a mistake and should be rectified.

Gentile's proposed amendment was debated for some time with an approximately equal number of people speaking for and against it. When the question on this amendment was finally called though, the 70-59 vote made it apparent that the majority of faculty there felt alumni representation should not be deleted from the Council.

With the acceptance of the Gentile amendment the point was quickly made that the number of "professional staff" represented would have to increase from six to some higher number whereby the professional staff would be in a majority. This was necessary in line with NCAA rules on the structure of Athletic Councils.

Some proposals where made to provide for this increase in professional staff representation, but no figure could be agreed upon.

A motion to rescind the Gentile amendment, proposed by Prof. Tillona, was defeated after Ladd had spoken.

Inmate Speaks On Prison Reform

By ROBERT TOUAKE

Simon Dantzler, currently an inmate at Hampshire County Jail, gave a short discussion on prisons and prison reform, sponsored by the Third World Alliance last night. He spoke in place of the Harlem Six who were forced to cancel their appearance due to fatigue from previous talks earlier.

Dantzler related his experience to all the oppressed people. Explaining that his experience as an inmate and their experience as a minority share common ground.

He commented further that he rehabilitated himself through his own sources and not those available at Hampshire County. Related to the idea of prisoner rehabilitation, he said students from Smith College have been working with inmates at Hampshire County and thru their efforts inmates have been inspired to work in their communities with young people when released.

Personally, Dantzler hopes to be, helpful to the struggle, a better person, and to be able to handle the situation when he is released. He said that "awareness, concern, and dedication thru self action" will bring this about.

A discussion on the abolition of prisons followed Dantzler's talk. The trend of which advocated that prisons were part of a process of socialization which issues policemen guns to protect us from criminals for our own safety but instead we are victims of these arms because we've locked ourselves into a police state.

Tanzania was mentioned as a contrast to this society. In that country there are no prisons and police don't carry any kind of weapon.

The discussion then developed around the question of prisoner education. It was brought out that prisons have developed into educational institutions. In many cases prisoners, working with people from the outside, are studying courses and where this isn't possible, developing their own programs.

Residential Colloquia Credation To Be Reviewed

By MARY GOODYEAR

A proposal allowing for credation of the residential colloquia will be presented to the faculty senate at its final meeting May 25.

The colloquia which are intended to supplement and enhance regular academic offerings, are offered in each of the residential areas. In the past, credit has been received for those colloquia which met academic rigor standards. Questions have been raised as to which colloquia meet academic standards, on what ground is the decision based, and who is qualified to teach an acredited colloquia. The proposal which was drawn up by the Colloquiam Proposal Committee to provide workable solutions to the questions raised, was passed by the Faculty Senate of Academic Matters by an 8-2 vote.

The proposal suggests that each residential area with a colloquim program have a Curriculum Committee composed of at least fifty percent faculty members. This committee would have the power to approve or reject colloquia proposals on the basis of academic standards.

It will also be proposed that each colloquia be sponsored and/or taught by a University faculty member who would be responsible for the quality and academic rigor of the colloquia. Undergraduate teachers would therefore need to be sponsored by a faculty member.

Students enrolled in colloquia will receive one credit of "pass" per colloquim, if the proposal is passed. Also credits for colloquia would be limited at two per semester for each student, and twelve for an entire undergraduate career.

Ms. Pat Crosson, head of the Colloquia Proposal Committee, said "the proposal articulates the methods for the colloquia and protects the program from those who would take advantage of it." She added, "the colloquia program is a really good way of giving students a chance at trying to teach something they are really interested in. Also, it is good for community building. When asked what the Senate is expected to do with the proposal she said, "There is no way to tell what that senate will do."

An ad hoc committee of students, staff, and faculty has formed to try to get student support for the proposal. Various petitions are circulating in each of the residential areas supporting the proposal.

Legislature Split On War Issue

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts legislature, reflecting the mixed national reaction to President Nixon's Vietnam War moves, has divided itself in putting its feelings on record.

The House approved Thursday a Republican-sponsored resolution urging North Vietnam to accept President Nixon's peace proposals, bring home its troops and release American prisoners of war.

On Wednesday the Senate condemned "in the strongest possible terms" the recent escalation of the Vietnam War and urged "immediate withdrawal" of American forces from Indochina.

The House resolution passed as a substitute for another resolution filed earlier that would have urged Congress to adopt an amendment filed by Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Montana. The Mansfield amendment calls for a complete end to U.S.involvement in Southeast Asia within six months after an agreement is reached to release all prisoners of war.

Adoption of the Republican resolution filed by Rep. William G. Robinson, R-Melrose, the assistant GOP whip, meant the Mansfield amendment resolution was killed.

Fourty-four members of the House, which voted 146-9, chose to vote "present" on the roll call, meaning they would not support or oppose it.

The resolution adopted by the House says demands for a withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Vietnam is a call for "unilateral action...and this action should be bilateral and binding on all parties involved in this conflict."

The resolution continues:

"The General Court of the Commonwealth urgently requests the government of North Vietnam to immediately withdraw all communist troops from South Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia and to release forthwith all American prisoners of war."

Fac Sen

SGA President Larry Ladd was given the opportunity to speak before the meeting. He expressed his absolute amazement and dismay at the actions being taken by the faculty. He stressed the fact that the original amendment was a compromise worked out through months of negotiations in the Faculty Senate, and that by voting to give the alumni the four vote representation on the Concil, all this work was going down the drain.

He asked for some consideration of the consequences of subverting this year long effort, among the students on this campus, when they see "that the democratic process does not work and many decisions are still made in an authoriatian manner."

Prof. Walter Denny then proposed to increase student representation in response to the increase in alumni representation.

There was considerable confusion a to how this should be done as there was with the proposals to increase professional staff representation.

Out of this confusion, Faculty Senate Secretary Robert Wellman proposed that the entire matter be referred back to the Faculty Senate for re-negotiation. This motion was passed by the general faculty, and therefore the whole matter will have to be discussed all over again at some point in the future.

ministrating your rights. It is a serious matter for you and there are serious consequences, but we cannot handle a crowd like this." He went on to explain that yesterday's demonstrators were arrested on only one charge--disturbance of the peace.

At this point one person in the crowd exclaimed "When is Nixon going to be charged with disturbance of the peace?" Judge Landers appealed to the crowd saying, "We know what you're doing. We know why you're here. You're not strangers to us. I mean that very sincerely."

On the previous 13 days of arrests, persons were charged with three offenses--disturbance of the peace, disorderly conduct and blocking people from getting to work.

Gil Salk then spoke briefly, calling for all of us to "declare peace on America." He asked that we spread our message of peace and our success at Westover, to other military installations, bringing it with us this summer, to continue to work for peace.

While waiting to be booked, spirits were high among the demonstrators. There was singing, poetry reading, sharing of food and friendly conversation with the policemen.

Arraignments will be held all this morning and Monday and Tuesday if necessary.

The demonstrations will continue on Saturday morning at ten AM outside the gates of Westover Air Force Base. Those planning to go to Westover will meet on the Amherst Green at 9:15.

Law School Planned Here

A committee charied by Attorney General Robert H. Quinn will release this morning a report recommending the establishment of a law school on the Amherst campus. The report will be presented to President Robert Wood by Attorney Gneral Quinn at a press conference this morning in President Wood's office. It is the result of a year-long study by a committee of sixteen legal experts which was formed at Dr. Wood's request to advise the University of the feasibility of a law school.

Rather than merely a law school, the report stresses that the new program should be a "Law Center", offering courses for undergraduates and programs in applied legal professions as well as in Law itself.

The committee, which was composed of lawyers in private practice, poverty lawyers, public officials, legal scholars, and law students, found five reasons for establishment of a law center at the University of Massachusetts now:

1. The burgeoning student interest in the study of law.
2. The need to provide opportunities for low income, minority, and women students to study law.
3. The academic enrichment of the University.
4. The need for innovative approaches to legal education.
5. The public service opportunities available to a public law school.

The committee recommended an Amherst location for the law center because Boston already has five law schools and because of the unmet needs for clinical placement and public service in Western Massachusetts. The report urges that planning for the law center begin immediately, with students to be phased in gradually over the remainder of the decade.

According to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, work on the school's proposal will begin on Monday. He stated in an exclusive MDC interview that Goodell Library is the likely choice for the Law Center.

He said, "This comes at a good time, considering how we are now in the process of moving the Library from Goodell to the new tower."

Three Shot At New Mexico

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Police and students at the University of New Mexico at Alburquerque clashed for the second day in a row yesterday.

Thursdays demonstration climaxed when police shot into a crowd of 4-500 students rushing their position. At least three students were seriously wounded by the shotgun blasts and, according to campus radio station KUNM, numerous students were injured.

University President Ferrell Heady declared a state of emergency on the campus and imposed a curfew from 11 p.m. last night until 7 a.m. this morning. Heady said he was taking the action because of "the tension that has been created by the events of the past few days."

Ernie Gilbert, a KUNM newsman said in a telephone interview police had sealed off all entrances to the campus and laid down a tear gas barrage to keep students inside. The shooting occurred when gas was blown back upon the officers and the crowd charged the police formation.

According to Gilbert after the shots were fired there was a momentary stand off between the police and protestors. Then rocks started to be thrown from the crowd. The VVAW went down and talked to the police said Gilbert to try and arrange some kind of truce.

The police told the VVAW that if any more rocks were thrown they would open fire with M-16's. Gilbert said no more rocks were thrown.

As of eight yesterday evening the campus was relatively quiet.

The trouble started Wednesday night. Gilbert said bands of people were fighting the police that night on and around the campus. The State Police were eventually called in, and they, in conjunction with city police covered the campus with tear gas.

Gilbert said at least six students received buckshot wounds Wednesday night.

At one point a helicopter was used to drop tear gas on the campus.

The University has a total student population of 20,000. Despite the violence Gilbert said most students were staying on campus. Classes are scheduled to end in one week.

The Student Senate on the campus yesterday called for the impeachment of President Nixon, immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces in Indo-China, and the setting up off a provisional revolutionary government in South Vietnam. Another resolution condemned the action of the State Police.

Sylvan Controversy Continues

By MARY GOODYEAR

Organization of next year's colloquium program in the Sylvan residential area is underway despite a current credit controversy.

A proposal will soon be put before the faculty senate which concerns the possibility of academically orientated colloquia becoming accredited. Until a decision about the proposal has been reached, it will have to be said that colloquia will be offered on a no credit basis.

The reason the Sylvan colloquium committee, which is composed of students, staff, and faculty, is continuing plans for next year's program is because, according to Dick Palomba, of the Sylvan area director staff, "students feel the program is an essential part of living and learning." According to a recent interest survey taken in the Sylvan area, to which about 600 students responded, Palomba said "three out of every four said they would still like to see colloquia offered even if it were not given credit."

Topics for the various colloquia will be selected much on the basis of interest shown on the survey toward particular subjects. Colloquia offerings will include such a range of subjects as theoretical auto mechanics, human sexuality, first-aid, consumer protection, photography lab, beer and winemaking, and leathercraft.

The Sylvan committee is looking for people who would be interested in conducting a colloquia. Anyone interested in teaching, who has previously taught a colloquia, or who has a special knowledge about a subject and feels he could do a good job teaching it, may make up his own colloquia proposal and send it to Dick Palomba at the Sylvan Studies and Affairs Office in Cashin, or call 545-1391 for information, by May 23. The proposals should include colloquia criteria, breakdown, and discussion topics.

Impasse Continues At School Of Ed.

By STEVE TRIPOLI

The impasse in the School of Education continued today, with members of the School Council stating the opinion that Dean Dwight Allen had not been totally fair in his dealings with the Third World Caucus. The Council members who stated this position claimed that Allen had created the impasse by recognizing the Steering Committee on the Caucus without recognizing the Caucus itself.

In a late development, Dean Allen told the Collegian that due to the circumstances of the School Council meeting today, where the predominantly non-minority Council recognized the Third World Caucus, he is calling for a poll of all minority members of the school, including faculty, to determine whether they want to be represented by the Third World Caucus. Allen's feeling on the subject was that he was "reluctant to have the School Council speak for the minorities."

According to Allen the vote will determine whether or not the School recognizes the Caucus. There will be a meeting of the Education Assembly Tuesday night where the results of the poll will be announced, and a major policy statement issued by the Dean if the minority members accept the Caucus.

In the poll itself, Dean Allen is asking the Steering Committee of the Caucus to select four of the seven supervisors for the election. The School's Executive Committee will select the other three.

Both Allen and the Alliance issued statements on Wednesday's breakdown in the negotiations in yesterday's Collegian. The Alliance's statement claimed that they had trusted the School of Education to "receive Third World perceptions for needed changes in the School... We were wrong!"

Dean Allen's statement centered around disappointment and some optimism, stating that "The School of Education has always sought diversity and a toleration of differences." He also stressed that he did not feel that the School was "polarized into minorities and non-minorities fighting each other."

SUG Board Asks Release From Services Agreement

By LAURA DUBOWSKI

The SUG Board decided last night to appeal to the Board of Trustees to release them from the Management Services Agreement concerning the Campus Center Hotel's ability to advertise.

Fiscal budgets, and a veto from the Chancellor's office were among other items brought to the attention of the board.

The Management Services Agreement places advertising restrictions upon the Campus Center Hotel. As it stands now, the Campus Center is allowed to advertise in newspapers and magazines for the use of the conference rooms only. Due to the fact that the Campus Center Hotel is operating at a loss, the Board would like to utilize more advertising--but discretely--to bring the hotel to what it should be.

Budgets for the fiscal year 1971-1972 were reviewed. Straw votes were taken on the budgets of the Campus Center Program Council, the Audio-Visual Media, and the Hotel. The remaining budgets will be reviewed next Thursday.

It was also noted that Chancellor Bromery vetoed the SUG Board proposal to allow the Director of the Campus Center to be responsible solely to the board in all matters. Bromery stated the propsal was "incompatible with the establishmed management principles of the University as approved by the Board of Trustees."

Mines Activated, Harbors Closed

U.S. planes carried out their deepest and heaviest air strikes inside North Vietnam Wednesday in more than four years, the U.S. Command reported. The planes streaked to within 60 miles of the Chinese border to attack North Vietnam's northwest rail link to China. The aircraft attacked in the vicinity of both Haiphong and Hanoi, the Command said, reporting seven enemy MIGs were shot down. Radio Hanoi said 14 U.S. planes were shot down. (AP)

SAIGON (AP) — American-laid mines armed themselves Thursday night in harbors of North Vietnam, bringing into force the latest effort to choke off the supply of enemy war goods.

Up to nightfall, hours after the mines activated at the entrances to seven port cities, there were no reports of incidents involving shipping.

The Pentagon announced that five ships including four flying the Soviet flag, left Haiphong harbor before activation, leaving 31 foreign vessels.

While the mine action and intense air strike over North Vietnam claimed attention in the Indochina war, an even more ominous threat built up against a provincial capital only 60 miles from Saigon.

Embattled An Loc, already 85 per cent destroyed, was battered by 7,000 rounds of artillery shells, rockets and mortars in a 14-hour period Thursday, South Vietnamese headquarters reported.

It was the heaviest enemy bombardment of the war and came after An Loc had been pounded by daily shellings of about 1,000 rounds since it was besieged April 7, early in the North Vietnamese offensive.

Enemy forces led by tanks launched repeated assaults at government troops in and around An Loc, but headquarters spokesmen said it still held at nightfall.

Spokesmen said they had no count of casualties in the fighting at An Loc.

President Nguyen Van Thieu has said the city must be held at all costs, but fears mounted it might soon become the second provincial capital to fall to the North Vietnamese. Quang Tri, the northernmost provincial capital, was taken by the enemy May 1.

On the northern front between Quang Tri and the old imperial capital of Hue, the military situation was termed "relatively quiet."

However, there were reports of North Vietnamese trucks and tracked vehicles moving north and south across the demilitarized zone dividing the warring Vietnam's.

Sources there said government forces still were pulling themselves together after the hammering they took in the Quang Tri debacle.

There were more scattered clashes and shellings of government positions in the central highlands, but no major drives on Kontum or Pleiku. Those highlands cities are considered prime objectives of the enemy offensive and new assaults have been expected daily.

Intense air strikes continued Thursday over North Vietnam, but specific targets were not disclosed immediately by the command in Saigon.

The Viet Cong's Liberation Radio claimed more attacks were carried out Thursday in the Hanoi-Haiphong areas and that three American planes were shot down.

U.S. headquarters announced a record 10 enemy MIG2s were knocked down Wednesday over North Vietnam. First accounts said seven of the North Vietnamese interceptors were downed.

Headquarters listed three American planes lost in Wednesday's raids. Two crewman aboard a Navy F4 Phantom parachuted and were rescued unharmed, but the four men aboard two Air Force planes were listed as missing.

Naval gunfire also slammed into North Vietnamese targets from what official communiques called "the most formidable cruiser–destroyer striking group assembled in the Western Pacific since World War II."

The Pentagon reported in Washington that four Soviet vessels–two tankers and two freighters– and a Hong Kong-based British vessel pulled out of Haiphone port before the mines were activated. That leaves 31 foreign merchant vessels there–12 Russian, five Communist Chinese, three Hong Kong-based British craft, three Polish, two Cuban, one East German and five under the flag of Somalia.

Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt, chief of naval operations, announced in Washington that activation of the mine fields occurred as scheduled.

North Vietnam, in a Radio Hanoi broadcast, declared it will "sweep out the U.S. mines...and will certainly smash all steps of brutal war escalation."

Casualty reports released Thursday by the U.S. Command showed American battlefield deaths in the fifth week of the enemy offensive soared to the highest level in seven months. The South Vietnamese reported a reduction in government casualties and a drop of more than 50 per cent in the number of enemy troops killed.

U.S. headquarters said 19 Americans were killed, five were reported missing and 28 were wounded last week. This compared with 2 Americans killed, 19 missing, and 24 wounded a week earlier.

The casualty report for the week ending last Saturday did not include a helicopter crash in which 32 Americans died Wednesday.

South Vietnamese government casualties last week were listed at 603 killed, 2,028 wounded and 737 missing in action. A week earlier, 769 government troops were reported killed and 2,794 wounded.

Enemy casualties last week were 2,349 killed, headquarters said, compared with 5,031 reported killed in the previous week.

In Brief...

China Will Stay Out

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said today talks with China's leaders convinced him China will not intervene to release U.S. war prisoners or end the war on a basis not satisfactory to North Vietnam. Reporting to the Senate after a three-week tour of China taking him and Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott to six cities, Mansfield said the current escalation of the war has "tarnished" the significance of President Nixon's historic trip to Peking.

11 More Dead In Mine Fire

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP) — Rescue crews probing the burned-out Sunshine silver mine have discovered 11 more bodies. But fear of smoke and gas and lack of communications has slowed efforts to go deeper in search of 33 missing men.

Lone Ranger Creator Dead

GROSSE POINTE, Mich. (AP) — George W. Trendle, 87, creator of the "Lone Ranger" on radio nearly 40 years ago, died Wednesday. Trendle also created "Sgt. Preston of the Yukon" and the "Green Hornet" during the heyday of radio.

Moscow Talks Are On

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon, smiling and injecting the word "friendship" into casual conversation, met Thursday with a Soviet trade minister who later said: "We never had any doubts" about the May 22 Moscow summit.

The comment by Foreign Trade Minister Nikolai Patolichev came after a surprise White Houe meeting, described officially as a "courtesy call" by the minister and Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin.

The session, which opened in a display of cordiality, came soon after the Soviet government denounced Nixon's mining of North Vietnamese ports.

The Moscow statement was more reserved than some U.S. officials had expected and made no reference to the talks between Nixon and Soviet leaders scheduled to begin in 11 days.

This could be an indication, the officials said, that Kremlin leaders were still pondering steps to counter Nixon's stern moves intended to choke off the flow of Hanoi's war supplies.

The White House and State Department had no official comment on the Soviet statement but said they were studying it.

Mine Co. Could Have Prevented Own Flood

WASHINGTON (AP) — The West Virginia flood last February that killed more than 100 persons might have been averted had the Bureau of Mines enforcedits own regulations, says a bureau official who headed the official investigation.

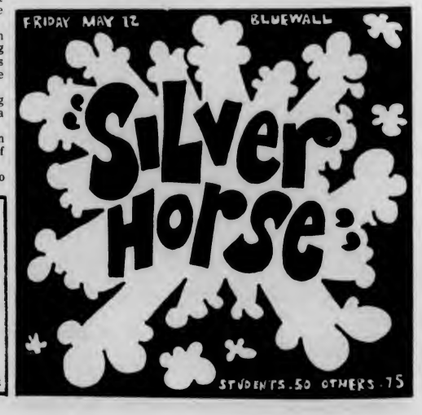
The flood occurred Feb. 26 when a mound of coal mine wastes, damming a mountain stream, broke under heavy rains and sent an estimated 21 million cubic feet of water cascading through the narrow Buffalo Valley below.

William R. Wayment, head of an Interior Department investigating team, said the Bureau of Mines missed opportunities to avoid the disaster by failing to:

—Apply a regulation forbidding impoundment of water by such a waste pile.

—Apply a regulation requirement weekly inspections of such a "dam."

—Live up to a 1967 pledge to watch such mounds for "unstable conditions that might endanger life."



The tragedy might have been averted, Wayment said in an interview, if the bureau had done any of those three things.

Buffalo Mining Co. had dumped mine wastes 40 to 60 feet deep across a branch of Buffalo Creek to create a waste settling pond, which grew to a half-mile-long lake under heavy rain, Wayment's task force reported last March 12.

When the mound collapsed, a wall of water destroyed the towns of Saunders and Lorado and wreaked havoc for 17 miles.

The flood killed at least 118 persons and destroyed more than 500 homes.

Another seven persons are listed as missing and presumed dead.

Nixon Increases Oil Imports

WASHINGTON (AP)-Acting to offset insufficient U.S. production, President Nixon on Thursday approved a 15 per cent increase in oil imports for the remainder of 1972.

He signed a proclamation permitting a boost of 230,000 barrels a day in the quotas on imports of crude and unfinished oil from the Middle East, Latin America and Canada.

Nixon acted on the recommendation of the eight-member government Oil Policy Committee, headed by George A. Lincoln, director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness.

It was the fourth time since February, 1970 that import levels have been raised because of reports oil production has not kept up with increasing demands.

Oil specialists have said the United States will probably depend on imports for 46 per cent of its national oil requirements by 1980.

Elmer Bennet., assistant director of OEP said the latest revision is the result of reevaluation of the balance of supply and demand. Under present conditions, Bennett said, domestic production would not meet anticipated demands for the rest of the year without the aid of imports.

Under Nixon's order, the daily quota on imports from the Middle East and Latin America was raised from the previous level of 965,000 barrels a day to 1,165,000 barrels.

The Canadian allotment was boosted by 30,000 barrels a day to a new total of 570,000 barrels daily.

Under the regulations, Bennett said, overseas allocations can be used to substitute for Canadian imports.

The quota was increased last time in December. Generally, the quotas have been set up on a production formula based on about 12.2 per cent of estimated domestic production. But they have had to be reevaluated frequently.

Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., said he has realized for some time that "the only available short-term method for dealing with this nation's energy crisis is to raise the oil import ceiling."

But the Texan said he hoped "such raises would be minimal, as the increase announced today appears to be."

Alaskan Pipeline Approved

WASHINGTON (AP)-Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton gave notice Thursday of his intention to permit an 800-mile oil pipeline across Alaska, but opponents of the project immediately promised a new court battle.

In his decision, Morton ruled out an alternative proposal, a route across Canada.

In Vancouver, B.C., Canada's minister of external affairs, Mitchell Sharp, called the pipeline plan "a very, very foolish move" and said Canada would oppose it.

The oil pipeline proposal has been stalled for two years by a court injunction, won by environmental groups, requiring the Interior Department to complete an environmental impact study before making a decision.

A spokesman for these groups said they will fight Morton's decision in court.

Simultaneously, a federal appeals court handed the environmentalists a procedural victory by allowing intervention in the case by a Canadian member of parliament and Canadian citizen organizations.

Supporters of the pipeline plan welcomed Morton's announcement but one of them, Alaska's lone House member, Democrat Nick Begich, said the case would be tied up in court another year.

Under the preliminary injunction issued by federal judge George L. Hart in 1970, Morton had to complete an environmental study and then give the court and the environmentalists two weeks' notice before taking action on the application of seven oil companies for a right-of-way across Alaska.

Morton issued the impact statement last March 20, allowed 45 days for written comment from the public, a deadline which ended one week ago, and gave the required two-weeks notice Thursday.

He said, "The permits will be issued as soon as that can be done without violating any court order."

In explaining his decision, Morton said he considered both the proposed route from Alaska's north slope to a port at Valdez with a tanker transport link to the U.S. west coast, and an alternate all-land route through Canada.

Both routes posed some environmental problems, he said, but the Canadian route would take three to five years longer to complete.

"...We need this oil delivered to our west coast as promptly and as safely as possible," he said.

"I am convinced," Morton said, "that it is our best national interest to avoid further delays and uncertainties in planning the development of Alaska North Slope oil reserves by having a secure pipeline located under the total jurisdiction and for the exclusive use of the United States."

Vietnam Pilot Says Napalm Not Torturous

DA NANG, Vietnam (AP) - John Patrick O'Gorman is one of the men President Nixon has called on to stop the North Vietnamese move into South Vietnam. O'Gorman pilots a U.S. fighter-bomber.

"Without the Air Force the North Vietnamese would have walked to Saigon," he says. At the same time, Lt. Col. O'Gorman admits that air power alone cannot win the war: "Sometime, someplace, the South Vietnamese are going to have to meet the North Vietnamese on the ground and fight it out. We can't do everything."

At 43, O'Gorman has logged about 300 combat hours in his F4 since November. He also serves as commander of a tactical fighter squadron at the DaNang air base.

He loves both jobs, but he adds:

"I don't always enjoy the results of the work-the death of any man diminishes us all."

Working with younger pilots, O'Gorman says, is a pleasure and a challenge. "Technically they're just beautiful but it's a job to instill spirit in them...The type of spirit I learned from World War II pilots and Korea. My biggest job is to try and hand down some of that spirit I learned."

O'Gorman is the father of seven children.

"I know that many people are killed by my actions," he says thoughtfully, "but I justify my actions and the war on two counts, at least in my mind.

"When I was stationed at Bien Hoa during my first tour here in 1965, there must have been 27 Catholic parishes on the Bien Hoa to Saigon road, with people who had come from the North. Those people came here for a reason. They didn't want to live under communism.

"We owe them much consideration before we leave them."

O'Gorman also believes the United States has an implied promise to these people. "How can the United States sit at a conference table if we just leave? How could anyone trust such a nation?"

Napalm, O'Gorman says, is an effective weapon: "It's terrorizing but not torturous. Perhaps all killing is immoral to an extent. But is one method more immoral than another?"

O'Gorman says he spends little time thinking about being captured. "I've thought about it and I've reached a conclusion to satisfy myself. Whenever the thought crops up, I avoid it. I dismiss it.

"The golden B.B. - the shot that goes through the canopy-can happen to you any time but it's senseless to think about it all the time. It can become an obsession. Discipline will carry me through."

The word "discipline" runs through O'Gorman's conversation. He jokingly comments this may be the result of "a normal Irish-Catholic boyhood" in St. Louis, Mo. He took a premedical course for a year at St. Louis University before joining the Air Force in 1952. "I suppose I joined because of all the notoriety and publicity of World War II," he says. "And I like it. There's a certain amount of order...discipline...loyalty and courage that gives you satisfaction.

Ireland To Join Market

DUBLIN (AP)-Ireland Thursday voted overwhelmingly in favor of joining the European Common Market, ending 50 years of isolation and handing a massive rebuff to political leaders of violent nationalism.

The voters were asked to give Prime Minister Jack Lynch constitutional power to take the nation into Europe. They did so with a mighty "yes."

With 35 of the 42 electoral districts counted, the vote was 838,987 in favor and 177,774 against. The "yes" vote was ahead in all remaining districts.

Lynch's Fianna Fail party, the soldiers of destiny, proclaimed "a fantastic victory we aimed at 2 to 1 in favor but it looks closer to 4 to 1."

The result gives the government power to amend Ireland's 1937 constitution so that laws of the European community will have full force here.

A victory for entry had been expected but not on this scale. It represented a revolutionary turn away from the isolationism which dominated Irish political thought through most of the 50 years since the break with Britain.

The vote also represents a big boost for promarketeers in Denmark and Norway, two more applicants who have yet to make a referendum decision on community membership. Britain, the fourth applicant, decides in Parliament and not by national vote.

The decisive factor in the big "yes" vote was the belief of Irish farmers that they can only benefit from access to a huge market hungry for their beef.

N. England Protests Gaining Momentum

By The Associated Press

Authorities fired at least two dozen tear gas cannisters into antiwar demonstrators in Cambridge Thursday night after the protestors set sporadic trash can fires and barricaded a major traffic artery.

Earlier, a splinter group of the demonstrators, who had marched here from downtown Boston, attacked two newsmen, injuring both.

About 35-40 Cambridge police sought to bring under control the main body of demonstrators, who were clustering in groups on and near the Massachusetts Institute of Technology campus.

More than 1,000 persons participated in the demonstration that began originally at the John F. Kennedy Federal Building in Boston.

It slowly wound through downtown Boston and then proceeded toward Cambridge, where Boston police dropped away.

On the march to Cambridge several demonstrators broke away from the main group and threw red paint on a building at MIT before throwing trash and lumber across railroad tracks at another area in Cambridge. The splinter group numbered between 30 and 50 persons.

The splinter group subsequently attacked an Associated Press photographer and an AP newsman who had followed them, attempting to destroy the photographer's camera and pictures.

Both newsmen were injured, neither seriously, and later were taken to a hospital for treatment, but the photographer's pictures were not destroyed.

Police, confronting the demonstrators in Cambridge, began firing tear gas cannisters as some demonstrators set fire to curbside litter baskets and threw them into the street.

Showers helped scatter demonstrators although clusters of persons were reported in various areas in Cambridge.

Police continued to patrol near the MIT campus.

On occasion, the police would lob tear gas cannisters into crowds that had regrouped after being broken up earlier. Dogs also were used to disperse the gathering protesters.

Hundreds of persons, including the president of Amherst College and the wife of the Smith College president, were arrested Thursday during antiwar demonstrations, including one in which seven veterans chained themselves to a door on board the U.S.S. Constitution, "Old Ironsides."

Dr. John William Ward, president of Amherst, and his wife Barbara, were among approximately 350 persons arrested at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee, Mass.

Another arrested there was Cornellia Mendenhall, wife of Thomas Mendenhall, president of Smith College.

Ward, 49, said that 15 to 20 faculty members from Amherst also were arrested.

Police, who estimated the number of demonstrators at 700, said they arrested approximately 350, all on charges of disturbing the peace.

Those arrested sat in roadways leading to the base's two gates to block traffic.

Judge James Landers of Chicopee District Court stood on the hood of a bus in an alleyway next to the police station and used a bullhorn to tell those arrested they were released in personal recognizance and would be arraigned Friday.

Other arrests in New England were reported in Boston; New Haven, Conn.; and Hanover, N.H.

The Marine Corps moved in on 11 Vietnam Veterans Against the War, who boarded the U.S.S. Constitution, moored in Boston Harbor at the Charleston Navy Yard. The Frigate is the flagship of the commandant of the 1st Naval District.

Seven of the protesters chained themselves to a door in the old captain's quarters on the ship.

Cmdr. Matthew Romano, public affairs officer for the 1st Naval District, said he asked the seven to leave peacefully, and they then read a statement saying they opposed the war in Southeast Asia.

Romano said they also told him they would not leave until they had a statement from the Navy saying the Navy opposed the war and the current policy of President Nixon.

The decks of the ship were cleared first of school children who were visiting it, and then, with two marines to each demonstrator, the 11 were removed from the ship.

They were taken to a security office on the base. No charges were filed immediately.

At Tufts University at Medford, Mass., campus police Thursday discovered an apparent attempt to fire bomb a Navy ROTC station wagon.

A university spokesman said a one-gallon container of gasoline and oil was found in the car, parked in a lot near the ROTC building. A fuse had burned part way down to the fluid.

The FBI, Navy intelligence and Medford police were investigating.

In Boston, more than 100 persons were arrested in front of a military recruiting office in the downtown section. They were charged with being disorderly persons.

Other antiwar protesters in the city picketed at the John F. Kennedy federal building in Government Center, where approximately 5,000 persons work.

No attempt was made to block the entrances to the building. The crowd grew and then marched into Boston Common. Last Monday more than 200 persons were arrested there for attempting to prevent employes from entering the building during a demonstration involving some 1,500 persons.

In Hanover, N.H., 31 persons were arrested for blocking traffic at the Army Cold Regions Research Laboratory in the second day of demonstrations there.

More than 100 persons participated, and 20 of those arrested were students at Dartmouth College.

In Worcester, Mass., some 40 persons were arrested on charges of obstructing the sidewalk at a demonstration in front of the federal building.

Some 60 persons demonstrated. Those arrested lay down in front of the building attempting to block the entrances.

In New Haven, Conn., approximately 10 persons were arrested after a scuffle in which demonstrators tried to block the path of a police vehicle containing Jack Smith, local leader of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War.

Smith had been arrested shortly after entering the building where a Marine recruiter had scheduled interviews. Police said he blocked the way of a student trying to enter the building.

Some 120 demonstrators blocked the entrance to a building at Yale University where Marine recruitment interviews were scheduled.

In Rhode Island, some 10 student spent two days and nights in the ROTC building at the University of Rhode Island in Kingston.

Approximately 20 persons picketed in front of the federal building in downtown Providence.

At Burlington, Vt., about 25 students continued a sit-in at the ROTC building at the University of Vermont.

At Center Harbor, N.H., approximately half the students at Belknap College participated in a poll in which 75 per cent said they were opposed to President Nixon's moves in Vietnam.

The faculty senate at the college passed a resolution condemning the blockade and giving students the option to cut classes to participate in either pro or anti war activities if they make up the work later.

The University of New Hampshire at Durham cancelled a meeting of chief executives of state universities of Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire because of the possibility of unrest on the campuses.

In Brockton, Mass., students from area colleges and other persons marched to the downtown area where some mailed antiwar letters to congressmen.

In Medford, Mass., the Tufts University Schools of Medicine and Dental Medicine Students-Faculty Committee to end the War, issued a statement saying in part:

"President Nixon's latest military moves creates a new world crisis. We are now faced with international confrontation and the spector of nuclear holocaust. The threat has come home to us and we must react.

"In the face of the latest acts of war-especially the blockade and the increased bombing-the President calls for the support of the American people.

"We cannot give him this."

Culturnatives

Westover - And Beyond

By GILBERT J. SALK

Brothers and sisters, this is a hard column to write. It's the last one for this year, and there's much to be said. One part of CULTURNATIVES is incredibly alive and vibrant at Westover air Force Base. Over 750 people have been arrested in the past three weeks while demonstrating for peace in a peaceful, loving manner. They are showing the entire nation that peace can be achieved through peaceful means. The national media has brought the Westover story to the entire country. It has received more press on the West Coast than in the Northampton paper.

And it will continue.

I've got a lot to say, so let me take a moment to outline some major points. You can jump ahead to read what interests you.

1. Continuing action at Westover.
2. Going on the Base.
3. Taking Westover home for the summer.
4. National GI strike.
5. Money

CONTINUING ACTION AT WESTOVER

At the very latest, non-violent civil disobedience will continue three days a week at Westover for the next month. Groups will gather at the main gate at 7:30 on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and at 10:00 on Saturdays. Prior to each demonstration, people will gather an hour earlier on the Amherst Common for transportation to the Base.

Workshops to deal with legal questions, disucss the meaning of non-violence, and role play the next day's activity, will meet every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evening at 7:30 in the 1st Congregational Church in Amherst. The church is on Main St., two blocks down on the right-hand side.

GOING ON THE BASE

To date, all of the demonstrations have taken place outside the base, on Chicopee property. As a result, we've been dealing exclusively with Chicopee city officials. We have established and maintained warm human relationships with everyone. We have the respect (but not unanimous support) of the police, the judge, the mayor, and many other officials.

This is fine, but some of us feel it is time to focus our target more closely. We intend to do non-violent civil disobedience on the base, so that we'll be arrested by federal officials, tried in federal courts, and no longer be a burden to the Chicopee taxpayers. It will give us a new group to communicate with, and, we hope, add strength to the message of peace which we are trying to communicate.

Those participating are being asked to make some basic commitments beforehand. First, we will refuse to accept bail. Second, we will not pay any fines. Third, our defense in court will not involve any legal technicalities. It will be based solely on obedience to higher law and the precedent of the Nuremberg Trials. Fourth, we will be committed to total non-violence. And fifth, we will make very attempt to deal as openly and humanely as possible with base officials, the arresting officers, and the judicial officials.

The date of the first action will be May 19, and we invite others to join us. If you're interested, leave your name and phone number at the United Christian Foundation, 545-2789.

We intend to contact the base commander and outline to him the date and scenario of our action. We will attempt to arrange, through him, for some joint training with the military police who will be arresting us, in order to reduce the chance of violence. If he refuses, we will seek help in arranging the joint training from Mass. Senators Kennedy and Brooke. In short, we will do all in our power to be sure that there is no violence at the demonstration.

TAKING WESTOVER HOME

For now, the success of the Westover action can only be measured on a yardstick of local impact, but national media is starting to pick it up in detail. The next important step is to carry the idea of continuous, day-to-day, non-violent, civil disobedience to other military installations. The impact will increase tremendously with each new base that becomes subject to such action.

You can each help. When you go home for the summer, be a missionary for non-violent civil disobedience. Tell people what's been happening here, and ask if they'd help do the same thing at the military installation or federal building nearest you. Locate a sympathetic clergyman and ask for the use of his church. Call a meeting and publicize it in your local newspaper, radio, and TV stations. If there are local people who have skills in training for non-violent CD, use them. If not, contact UCF here on campus (545-2789), and I'll help get a trainer to you.

There are many targets in Massachusetts, and even more in other parts of the country. If you commit yourself to just starting a local action near your hometown, we can win. Please join us in declaring peace on the United States of America and on the world.

NATIONAL GI STRIKE

We're not there yet, but if the arrests get enough publicity, particularly if we succeed in creating a national peace effort, then we could call for a GI strike. Up until now, we've been neglecting our brothers in uniform. Most of them are opposed to the war also, but because of the pressures of the draft saw no alternatives for themselves. We are in the process of creating an alternative for them. We will soon be able to tell them that we are getting arrested, and facing the prospect of jail, to help save their lives and the lives of our Vietnamese brothers and sisters. If they see and feel the depth of our commitment to them, it will give them the strength to refuse to be used as weapons.

Nixon has strength only because they, and we, follow orders. But if large masses of us refuse to pick up guns, refuse to type orders to ship munitions, refuse to load and fuel planes and ships, refuse to participate in the manufacture and transportation of death, then we have the power. It is ours to exercise if we so choose.

MONEY

There are a number of sub-topics here. We have been costing the city of Chicopee a great deal of money, and I feel that this is unjust. We are going to Chicopee only because of the presence of Westover. That is not Chicopee's fault. I have met twice with the city's mayor to suggest ways of reducing the cost to the city. One suggestion was to sue the federal government, which is the real instigator of the demonstrations, for maintaining an attractive nuisance (Westover) within city limits.

I met again with him today, this time alone, to suggest that he seek ways of having the city declared a disaster area and seek federal funds to assist with the cost o arresting us. He has agreed to explore both possibilities.

This may be a situation where letters to congressmen might help. Send them a copy of this column, with this section circled, and a letter urging them to make federal money available to the city of Chicopee for emergency relief. To date, the protests have cost the city over $20,000, and this should be considered a cost of war, not a burden on the citizens of Chicopee.

Bill Norris, our attorney, has been acting without pay, appearing nearly daily in court on our behalf. If you wish to help us thank him, send contributions to him c/o Valley Peace Center, Cook Place, Amherst, Mass. 01002. Bill has also requested that contributions be made to the Peace Center itself, and to the Chicopee Police Benevolence Fund, the last as a way of thanking the Chicopee police for their display of human concern in dealing with the demonstrations.

Finally, we need money for a publicity campaign. We need to take out ads in the local media to explain what we are doing, why we are doing it, and to try to enlist local support.

If you want to contribute to any, or all, of these efforts, send your check to the Peace Center at the above address. Include a note saying how much is to go to each fund. AND...

Despair is easy. We stand on the brink of nuclear war, led there by an insance president. I write this wondering if anyone will be alive tomorrow to read it. But I know that if despair takes over, then I will not be able to use today to try to make sure that there will be a tomorrow.

No one of us can change the world. But if none of us try, we can be sure that the world will never change. We must each do what we can to change ourselves and those we touch. We must learn that peace is not a political thing, but a lifestyle, and that we must first style our own lives to peace before we can bring peace to others. If we act with love, knowing that to love we must risk, that to love we must chastise, and that to love we must celebrate, then we shall overcome.

If fear or hopelessness immobilizes us, then the fear justifies itself. But if we act on faith, believing that we must do what we feel is right regardless of success, then the faith will justify itself.

The proof of this is in the Westover demonstrations. None of us who first proposed the non-violent civil disobedience imagined that it wold become as large as it already has. We acted out of a simple need to bear witness to our faith that killing is wrong. And two and two and fifty have become nearly a thousand.

You have power.

PEACE...

Amherst President Busted

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP) — The president of Amherst College, Dr. John William Ward, and his wife, Barbara, were arrested along with several hundred war protesters at Westover Air Force Base yesterday.

Ward, 49, his wife and the others were charged with disturbing the peace.

Those arrested had sat in roadways leading to the air base's two gates to block traffic. Police used buses to take those charged to the police station and the district court for arraignment.

It was the 14th war protest at Westover in the last three weeks.

Ward was given a standing ovation by 600 faculty members and students Wednesday when he said he planned to "join in an act of passive civil disobedience" at Westover to protest President Nixon's decision to mine North Vietnamese harbors.

Ward said that, "Nobody is listening to words any more," and that he felt it was time for him to make a personal statement by peaceful civil disobedience.

The faculty at Amherst voted Wednesday to suspend normal academic activity indefinitely. Classes are being held for faculty members and students who wish to attend.

The following is an interview with Richard Haal, on the foreign news desk at the newspaper Dagens Nyheter in Stockholm, Sweden. The Dagens Nyheter has a circulation of 418,600. The interview was conducted by transatlantic telephone at nine p.m. last night.

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Q-MDC What information do you have on what's happening to Hanoi and Haiphong?

A-Haal We have some news, but it's mainly reports from the French newspaper Le Monde.

Q-We understand from various sourced that Swedish ships may run the American blockade. Do you know anything about that?

A-No, I haven't heard anything about that. We have one story from Haiphong by a French journalist working for Le Monde, laude Juliere. He just described what's happening to him. He says that he and a group of journalists went to visit some Russians who were wounded. According to him, some American planes, probably Phantom jets, attacked a Russian cargo ship. That's what he says. He said it won't make any difference if the Americans bomb Haiphong because the population will get out of the city.

Q-Do you know when that report was filed?

A-We got it today so I suppose Le Monde will have it tomorrow too. I think it's fresh.

Q-Do you know if any ships, Russian or otherwise, have been struck by U.S. jets?

A-No. I only know about this one ship. But this must have happened a few days ago. Yes, probably one or two days ago.

This group of journalists was especially sent to those Russian sailors. The journalist said himself it's probably a political, I mean it's more or less propaganda. But anyway, they met these Russians, some were shot, some were wounded.

Q-We also heard, again we think from Le Monde, that Red China is mobilizing its land and air forces and has promised to aid North Vietnam. Do you know anything about this?

A-That China would be mobilizing?

Q-Yes.

A-No, we have no information about that.

Q-We understand that earlier in the day, Hanoi was being hit by American planes. We have heard, also by Le Monde, that the city was devastated. Have you any information on this?

A-Well, we know that yesterday there were some heavy attacks. Some of the news agencies estimate today's attacks as having a lower intensity than Wednesdays, but it seems areas close to Hanoi have been bombed.

Reuters: Sounds Funny To Me

The following is an interview with the Reuters News Service correspondent in New York City concerning the numerous rumors which have been circulating on the UMass campus the last few days.

MDC, The Collegian

I was wondering if you could confirm some information we've received. We understand that two Russian ships were rocketed and bombed by U.S. warplanes 20 hours ago that's a rumor, that's a radio report we heard from Canada. Do you know anything about it?

Reuters Press, N.Y.

We don't have that, and uh, you heard that from and I don't--where gotten that from and I dont--where gotten that from Canada, because our service goes to, you know, we supply Canapress, Canadian Press.

MDC

It was about three in the morning, from Quebec.

Reuters Press

No, well now what there is, is the Le Monde report out that American planes machine-gunned a Soviet vessel, wounding four Soviet sailors.

MDC

Would you know when that happened, roughly?

Reuters Press

I just know that Le Monde had that report and that it was, I guess today, and when the reporter filed it, I don't know.

MDC

OK.

Reuters Press

Which sounds kind of funny to me, because the Agence France Press doesn't have it and they have an office in North Vietnam, and neither does Tass.

MDC

Neither of those have reported it at all?

Reuters Press

No, they have not reported that.

MDC

OK. Could ' ask one more question? We also heard again through Canada, that Red China is mobilizing her land and air forces and has promised full support to N. Vietnam.

Reuters Press

Just a minute (gets wire story Peking).

I'm sure that we don't have that, what we have is a statement out of China Today. This was issued by the Foreign Ministry and it merely, well-uh-well, merely denounces the American people-uh-activity in the New-American News grossly violates (Skims article) etc....

MDC

Yah, I think we got that over our AP wire.

Reuters Press

Yes, that's all that we have...We have two staffers in Peking and if China were doing this and were making it public, they would file.

Dogs, Tear Gas Used

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Riot-equipped police used dogs and fired dozens of rounds of tear gas grenades to disperse hundreds of antiwar demonstrators who barricaded a major traffic artery here for nearly three hours Thursday.

Seven of the protestors were arrested and at least four people were injured in the disturbance, police said.

The demonstrators set fire to public litter barrels and debris in front of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology MIT and then used the material to blockade four-lane Massachusetts Avenue, this city's main artery.

Another group of the demonstrators threw trash and lumber across Boston and Albany railroad tracks not far from the campus. Police said the protestors jammed signal switches on the tracks which are used infrequently.

Police from Cambridge, Somerville, Watertown and the Metropolitican District Commission quickly moved in to break up the barricade and the demonstration, but the protestors scattered into small groups and mingled with students and passersby on the MIT campus.

The demonstrators dispersed after police, who numbered over 100, fired between 60 and 80 rounds of tear gas into the groups and arrested seven people.

Police said the seven were being held on charges ranging from being a disorderly person to assault and battery on a policeman with a brick.

UN Invaded By Protestors Constitution Occupied

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The United Nations closed its New York headquarters to tourists Thursday during a five-hour invasion by a handful of aniwar demonstrators. In Boston harbor, the historic frigate Constitution was isolated from the public during a third day of intense but scattered protest against President Nixon' new Vietnam policy.

Demonstrators who chained themselves to seats in the gallery of the U.N. Security Council eventually asked to be out free, and left peacefully. Outside, 300 other protesters were urged by radical lawyer William Kunstler to "get to the streets....disrupt every public function."

Reports from across the nation showed there was antiwar activity of significant scope in 23 states and the District of Columbia.

More than 500 arrests were reported during the day, most of them peaceful. However, tear gas was used against University of New Mexico students as they invaded campus buildings and disrupted some classes. One girl was overcome.

Later a group of protesters rushed two police patrol cars on the Albuquerque campus, and officers responded by firing shotguns at a high angle. Pellets believed to be birdshot hit several persons, although only one student required hospital treatment. He was later released.

Two persons were injured in shooting incidents on the campus Tuesday, including Carolyn Coburn, 22, who remained in serious condition. She later called the shooting accidental, saying an officer's gun discharged as he was stepping out of a car.

A four-hour blockade of a Marine recruiting center at the Yale University campus was interrupted twice by a clash between demonstrators and New Haven, Conn. police. There were 11 arrests.

About 5,500 Penn State university students turned an antiwar protest into a victory rally after Lt. Gov. Ernest Kline agreed to their demands for closing of the school's Ordance Research Lab, used for war-related projects.

St. Louis police arrested 36 demonstrators who sat and blocked the main gate of the U.S. Air Force Aeronautical and Chart Information Center, after which about 200 of their comrades dispersed.

The Boston demonstration that started at the federal building wound its way later to Cambridge, where police fired at least two dozen tear gas canisters to scatter protesters after they set trash fires and blocked a major thoroughfare near MIT.

In Los Angeles, UCLA's All-American basketball center, 6-foot-11 inch Bill Walton, was one of about a dozen persons arrested when police swept aside protesters who had barricaded the university's administration building.

A blockade thrown up by 250 antiwar demonstrators at an intersection near the University of South Florida was broken up by police who arrested two dozen students on charges of inciting to riot.

Eighteen demonstrators were arrested at New Brunswick, N.J., during a vain attempt to block local trains on the main line of the Penn Central Railroad. But five Southern Pacific trains were rerouted at Davis, Calif., after University of California students there spent most of the night sitting on the tracks.

Other groups of protesters tied up auto traffic at Santa Barbara, Cali. and on Chicago's South Lake Shore drive, among a number of target areas.

In New England, the president of Amherst College, his wife, and the wife of the president of Smith College were arrested after they joined students in blocking traffic at Westover Air Force Base at Chicopee, Mass.

Three days of window-smashing protest by University of California students at Berkeley left small merchants with an estimated loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars. More than 200 firms reported damage.

Seventeen students and faculty members from Columbia University and Brooklyn Community College chained themselves to seats in the visitors' gallery of the U.N. Security Council. They demanded to see U.S. Ambassador George Bush, currently president of the council.

A U.N. spokesman, William Powell, said U.N. headquarters would be closed to the public for the remainder of the day and Friday because of "the rising tide of demonstrations taking place."

Vietnamization Doomed From Start

(Editor's note: When President Nixon announced his intention to mine and "interdict" harbors in North Vietnam, he was tacitly acknowledging the obvious fact that his vaunted "Vietnamization" program has been a total military failure. A string of crushing defeats on the battlefield inflicted by forces they outnumber by over 15 to 1 has exposed the ponderous vulnerability of the Saigon army. Massive U.S. bombings have demonstrably failed to slow the offensive.

In the following article, Ngo Vinh Long, a South Vietnamese student currently living in the U.S., describes some of the reasons "Vietnamization" as a strategy for victory was doomed to failure from the start and some of the reasons Nixon went ahead with it anyway.

The article originally appeared in a newsletter put out by Vietnamese students who oppose U.S. aggression in their country. To get copies of the newsletter, which contains both articles like this and highly informative translations from the press in Saigon, write to Thoi-Bao Ga, 76a Pleasant St., Cambridge, Mass. 02139.)

CAMBRIDGE (LNS) — Although everybody generally admits that the Vietnam war is political, much emphasis is of course put on the military situation. Many people now consider the air war the linchpin and frequently assume that the end of the air war would mean an end to South Vietnam's problems.

But such a view tends to disregard the far-reaching effects of the Nixon Vietnamization program; even if one discusses only the military side of the Vietnamization program, the air war is only part of the strategy. The South Vietnamese army (ARVN) and its intended uses are central to Nixon's strategy.

When President Nixon took office he inherited a critical military problem: throughout the Johnson administration the Saigon army was always three to four times larger than "enemy" forces, it was much better equipped, and it was supported by tremendous American firepower and air-strikes--yet it would not fight. If there was to be war, American soldiers would have to do most of the fighting.

The "unreliability" of the Saigon soldiers and the support of the city population for the National Liberation Front (NLF) became apparent during the Tet offensive in 1968, when no Vietnamese warned the U.S. or the Saigon government of the planned attacks, although many had known about them long in advance. Instead they supplied the NLF troops. The only way that the U.S. could retake the cities and towns was to spread indiscriminate destruction so that the NLF would have to withdraw in order to save the lives of the city dwellers, who are, after all, their compatriots.

These events should have made it clear to Nixon that ARVN would not fight and that the cities were supporting the NLF even before American bombs were poured down on them. Yet on November 3, 1969, Nixon called for a "substantial increase in the training and equipment of the South Vietnamese forces."

Was it possible that President Nixon did not understand why he could not count on ARVN and the cities? The reasons were familiar to every Vietnamese:

--Almost every ARVN soldier and city inhabitant in South Vietnam had relatives living in the very same villages that were daily subjected to American air, artillery and chemical strikes for at least five years before Nixon took office.

--By 1968, about 80 percent of the villages in Vietnam had been destroyed many times over and more than one-third of the total population of the country had been made refugees several times over.

--The scale of corruption was such that a soldier's monthly pay was at a sub-subsistence level while Saigon insiders were piling up millions of dollars in Swiss banks.

--While members of the Saigon regime sent their wives and daughters abroad to have their eyes and noses fixed so that they would look more Western, the appallingly low salary of the soldiers, the hyperinflation caused by American spending, and the lack of food caused by the destructive bombing and anti-crop programs have forced many South Vietnamese soldiers' wives to become prostitutes and bargirls for the Americans. Saigon newspapers were full of stories about Vietnamese soldiers stealing to feed their families or committing homicide or suicide because their wives slept with Americans or because they could not feed their families.

In fact, Nixon understood all this and much more. Nixon realized that although the "enemy" could not use an actual fighting force of many more than 300,000 persons (owing to the limits of material support like food and weapons and the need to hide from American air power), nevertheless, if left to themselves back in the villages, the able-bodied Vietnamese males would be certain to help the "other side" whenever necessary. Since more than 3.8 million acres, one half of the total land in South Vietnam, had been destroyed by American chemical attacks in 1967, what else could possibly happen if the young men in the countryside were left unemployed and hungry?

Meanwhile, those males who had been "urbanized" according to Samuel Huntington's plan, if not inducted into the army and put under military discipline, would become revolutionary "fish" in the new urban "ocean."

For these reasons, the Nixon administration has increased the regular forces of ARVN to over 1.1 million men and the local forces to over four million. These local military forces, called "Oriental Minutemen" by the American military are the Regional Forces (RF), the Popular Forces (PF), and the Popular Self-Defense Forces (PSDF).

The first two groups are full-time soldiers organized into companies and platoons under provincial and district control respectively. The last are part-time militia, supposedly composed of males between 15 and 18 years or over 43, operating at the sub-district or village level. (In reality, anybody who can carry a gun is good enough for PSDF, whether children of 12 or men over 60.)

A male without military papers can be picked up on the street in one of the constant spotchecks and thrown into jail or sent to the front as a "regular" soldier, or arrested as a Viet Cong suspect (if he lives in the rural areas) and horribly tortured for "information."

Besides keeping the male population of the country under control and away from the NLF, the militarization of the South Vietnamese society accomplishes other things. It first of all, as Ambassador Bunker has so candidly described it, "changes the color of the corpses."

After the American troops landed in Vietnam, military tactics consisted of "search and destroy" missions: send American ground forces out on operations to search for the "enemy", draw their fire, and destroy them if possible with American air power and artillery strikes and other super-weapons. This tactic exacted high American casualties and caused the American public to become increasingly critical of the war. But how do you bring the boys home and simultaneously continue the war and maintain the Theiu regime?

The answer was to substitute Vietnamese boys for American, even though the Nixon administration realized it could no get them to fight any more than the Johnson administration had.

During the last three years, at least 60,000 "mop-up" operations involving more than a battalion of "allied" troops--most of them Vietnamese--have been carried out in inhabited areas of South Vietnam. More than 3,000 hamlets, about 26% of the total number in South Vietnam, have been destroyed and their inhabitants "urbanized," in these operations.

And of the seven million tons of high explosives delivered on all fronts in Indochina during the last three years, only about three million tons have been delivered by air. The rest was by artillery strikes and other means. Most of it was delivered by ARVN soldiers in South Vietnam.

They Did It Again

It's really sad that the Faculty Senate is so predictable. They were true to form yesterday when they strangled the Athletic Council issue in what Eric the Rat once fondly termed 'parlimentary bullshit."

This was the last hurdle for the amendment to the Faculty Senate constitution which would have given the students a positive influential position on the infamous Athletic Council. The amendment, fought for long and hard by Lee Sandwen and others, had already been passed by two Faculty Senate meetings and one meeting of the General Faculty. All that remained for the amendment to be ratified was a majority vote of the General Faculty. They never even voted on the original proposal yesterday.

Dean Gentile of the Graduate School proposed an amendment to the original proposal calling for an additional three alumni to be added to the Council. The amendment was accepted. It changed the composition of the council enough to make it invalid as a body under NCAA rules; nobody could decide how to rearrange the membership so as to legalize the whole mess, and the entire matter was tabled back to the Faculty Senate for revamping. Gone, a year of student struggle for a worthwhile goal. Precious time wasted only to have the issue sent back to the Fac Sen for more manhandling- another year's worth, to boot.

The moral of this story- if we have any illusions about working from within the system to change it maybe we should quit while we're ahead.

McGovern Isn't Funny

WASHINGTON--An ad hoc committee of humor writers and political cartoonists held an emergency meeting last weekend in Washington to see what they could do about Sen. George McGovern, who suddenly has become a viable presidential candidate.

The chairman of the committee in an opening statement warned the writers and cartoonists attending that there was a possiblity that McGovern could win the Democratic nomination, and if he did, they would be obligated to satirize him in words and drawings.

"It's impossible," a humor writer said. "McGovern has been running for a year now, and there is not one thing humorous about him."

"May I remind you," another cartoonist said, "that you said the same thing about Nixon in 1968."

"Nixon's different," the first cartoonist said. "You can at least draw his nose. "You can't even make a sketch of McGovern. he looks like everyone's high school chemistry teacher. If I don't put his name on the seat of his pants, no one knows who the heck he is."

A humor columnist said, "It's worse when you're trying to WRITE something funny about him. Has anyone managed to write anything funny about McGovern?"

There was dead silence in the room. "How can you write something funny about a man who comes from South Dakota?" a writer asked defensively.

The chairman said, "Well at least we're in agreement that McGovern isn't NATURALLY funny. The next question is how do we make him funny?"

There was dead silence in the room.

The chairman said, "Gentlemen, if by some chance McGovern were elected President of the United States, our jobs would be at stake. We would have to make fun of him for four years."

"I can't do it," a cartoonist cried. "I'd rather do commercials for American Airlines."

"Better Wallace than McGovern!" a gag writer yelled.

"You mean you'd rather have George Wallace as President of the United States than George McGovern?"

"We have to think of ourselves," the gag writer protested. "We know all of us could live with Wallace!"

"Huzzah! Huzzah!" the crowd shouted.

"Even Humphrey would provide us with more material than McGovern!" a cartoonist yelled. "I've got a lot of reject cartoons left over on him."

"You're avoiding the issue," the chairman warned. "This meeting was called to decide what to do about McGovern. A few months ago the chance of his being President was out of the question. But now we may have to live with him, and we have to decide how we can do it. What I suggest we do right now is test ourselves. The writers start writing funny gags about McGovern, and the cartoonists start drawing funny pictures of him. Then we'll exchange the ideas. You've got 30 minutes to produce something."

The writers and cartoonists got out their pads and pencils. The only sound in the room was a voice asking, "May I borrow your eraser?"

At the end of 30 minutes, the chairman called the meeting to order. "What have we got?"

The cartoonists held blank sketch pads.

"Cripes!" the chairman said. "What about the writers?"

"I have one," said one of the country's leading satirists. "Why does McGovern wear red suspenders?"

"To hold up his pants?" the chairman asked.

"You were peeking," the satirist said peevishly.

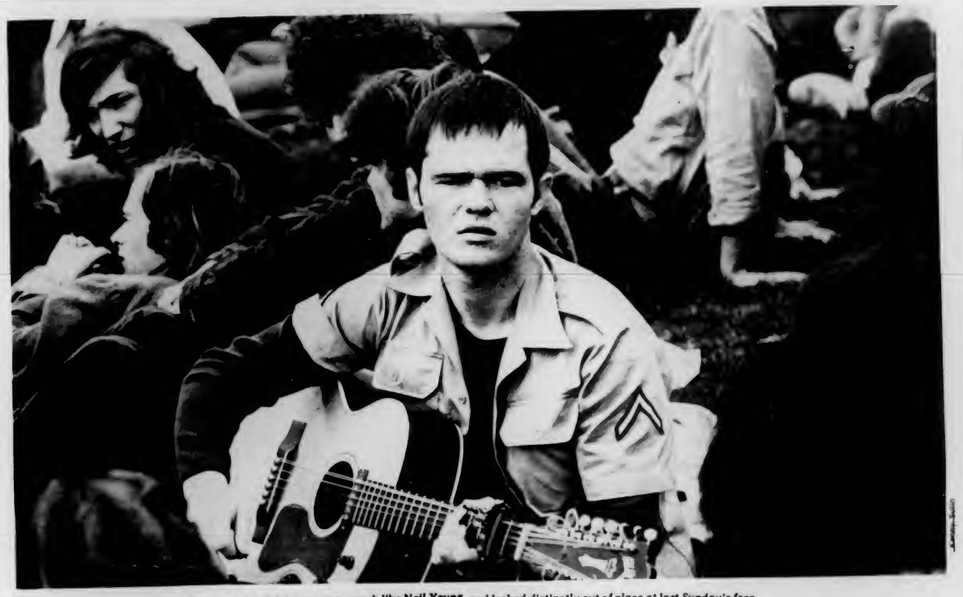
Let Us Face Facts

By DANIEL B. ITKIN

Mr. Donovan, in his responde to Ms. Egan's plea for free elective abortion, confronts us with a true moral dilemma. Both sides in the abortion dispute believe that their position is a moral one, and both are probably right. Each side claims to respect human life, one choosing to look at it from the point of view of the expectant mother, and her right to control her own body, the other from the point of view of the unborn child, and its right to life. Granted that we can never determine the humanity of the fetus, as we cannot prove or disporve the existence of God; this point will perhaps never be settled. But what can be settled is the question of individual rights involved. Just as a belief in God gives no one the right to force others to believe (that is what freedom of religion is all about), so the belief in the humanity of the fetus gives no one the right to enforce that belief on those who believe differently. Those who ask for free elective abortion are not trying to force anyone to have an abortion, they merely demand the right for individuals to be able to freely choose that option if they are so inclined, trusting in the woman's moral judgment. Those who would repeal the liberal New York abortion law, or block liberalizing attempts in other states, demand that no one be allowed freely to have a choice; they would force their point of view on others, in an attempt to legislate personal morality. They claim that the rights of the yet unborn, and most undeveloped, fetus, takes precedence over the rights of the potential mother, and they would force this belief down the throats of everyone.

Of course this would not do away with abortions. It would only make them more expensive, therefore discriminating against the poor and colored peoples, or more dangerous, discriminating against women in general, or both of these, a typical racist and sexist way to handle the problem.

Mr. Donovan talks about society's right to protect the fetus vs. the woman's right to choose. This is clearly a false issue. Societies do not have rights, individuals have rights, and groups have power. What is the political reality of the New York abortion law issue? In New York we find a few, not very well financed women's groups confronting a smoothly run, well-financed (Church money perhaps?), media propaganda campaign, with enough political clout to induce Tricky Dick to write a letter to Cardinal Cushing in support of the efforts to repeal the law. Tricky Dick taking a moral stand against killing? Someone must be kidding, it's another hot issue for him.



Let us face facts, Mr. Donovan. If "society" decides to continue the repressive abortion policies which have been prevalent in this country, this decision will be made by male dominated state legislatures, under pressure from an intensely vocal minority, forcing their beliefs upon all the rest of society, and especially upon women who make up the majority of our society. Thus the majority will be allowed no choice in this matter, they will not be granted the right to control their own bodies, nor to decide the morality of the issue for themselves.

I grant Mr. Donovan the right to believe in the humanity of the fetus, but until the evidence is in, he must grant a similar right to those who believe otherwise. He and anyone who believes as he does is allowed to act on their belief in that no one is being forced into having an abortion against their will. Those who believe in the right of the woman to control her body must also be allowed to act on the basis of their belief, and be allowed to freely choose abortion if they so desire.

Hard Times Hit Hookers

By JIM GORDON

She sat picking at the split ends in her shoulder length hair. Occasionally she would steal a glance at these sitting about her in the Campus Center Coffee Shop or make a remark to this reporter, but mostly she seems satisfied with picking at her hair and waiting.

Waiting has been pretty much her preoccupation during this past semester. "Business hasn't been too good," she said between drags of her extra-length Eve cigarettes. "Being a hooker hasn't been what you would expect. All that talk about glamour and money and clothes, forget it. It's a grind like anything else."

Her name was Sally. She wasn't very much different, physically or mentally, from any other student here on campus.

We met through her pimp, a bearded young guy who would sit at an adjacent table and start conversations with prospective customers. Upon our chance meeting, he became intrigued with the idea of writing a story about the underground world of girls of ill-repute here on campus and agreed to let this reporter meet his favorite employee.

Sally was his favorite for a good many reasons: She was what would be called a good looker; a supple shape, lovely fine features, with enticing, sensuous eyes to compliment her deep brown hair. She was, as one of her customers described her, "a nice piece."

"I find keeping myself up a challenge," she said. "Some girls let themselves go around my age. Drink too much, eat too many soft ice cream cones. Me, I take care of myself. It takes will power, but it's worth it."

She became involved in her current avocation innocently last Spring. "I was going out with this guy. It wasn't much, just some movies and things." She paused and pushed her hair back and smiled at a young man her pimp was now conversing with. "Then, out of nowhere, he suggested I work for him. I didn't know what exactly he meant. After all, he was just a psychology student and I was only in English, but when I caught on I was really pissed."

Her voice fell an octave and she leaned on her elbows. "I told him I thought he was lecherous and vile. Then I began watching the girls on my floor and how easy a lot of them put out. You know, go out to a bar uptown, meet some guy, ball for him, and I figured, why not? At least, I'd make some bread."

She has been making bread ever since. At first things were difficult. "This place is nowhere in the Summer, and some of it was my fault. I was pretty pickie about the tricks I let B———— get me. They were mostly guys up here for stays in the hotel away from their wives, out for a good time...you know the type. Well I didn't like them and preferred to pay my rent from money made as a car-hop girl at this restaurant. It was fun and B———— and I had a lot of laughs about some of the dudes he managed to find. (A long pause.) "But this place was nowhere this past summer. A real bummer."

B———— motioned to her from his table and she smiled and gave a little wave. "B———— wants me to wave at this guy he's with. It's his little way of makin' it kinda personal. I know that guy, too. We were in a history discussion last year. He was loud and obnoxious."

When asked what kind of guys she has met through B————, Sally told me, "I'd be surprised." They ranged from every type of person any large unversity would possess. "They're all the same to me, though. I stable in that area, I never allow personal involvement with my work. If some dude wants to see me again, I usually decline and tell him maybe some other time and place."

"I can sympathize with a lot of these guys." She was suddenly energetic, apparently the stenched coffee had exhibited a response. "A lot of guys, even really good lookin' ones, find it hard to meet girls and are willing to put out a little dough to sleep with one. I can't let my sympathy carry me away though. I'm here for my education and don't let anything interfere with my work."

Sally was an English major in her third year. She had an excellent cum. and hoped eventually to go to graduate school with intentions at being a research librarian. This past semester she was taking a Modern English novel course and a copy of Ulysses sat between us on the table.

"I like Joyce, although my favorite writer is D.H. Lawrence. I really identify with Gutrene in Women In Love".

Our subject returned to a more mundane level. We talked about possible arrest and personal retribution for what she was doing. "Arrest scares me, but I've gotten over that. Still I'm afraid that someone of these nights one of these guys is going to pull a silver badge out of his wallet and I'll be hurting bad. I'm a little less afraid of my parents finding out because they moved to Rochester, New York, last spring and we don't communicate that often."

"I'm not much more afraid about getting pregnant, since I went on the pill last year. My biggest fear is VD, but I keep myself pretty clean...I go to the Infirmary usually twice a month."

We sat quiet for a few moments. Sally lit another cigarette. "You know who really pissed me off," she said with an intensified husky voice, "Doctor David Reuben. His chapter about prostitutes was an insult to every working girl. I couldn't believe some of the false conclusions he came to. Like Prostitutes all hate men and only do it out of vengeance. Shit, I do it for the money, nothing more, nothing less. I really like guys, too, I couldn't do something I hated."

She picked up the copy of Ulysses and thumbed her way through it. "Having so much free time is helping me with my course work. I'm usually one up with readings. It's hell, though, with business."

This was a remark echoed by all the hookers this reporter managed to meet. When asked the reasons why, Sally came to a number of conclusions.

"Well, I would say a certain looseness by a good number of girls around town has something to do with it. You know,— (she named two popular Amherst nightspots) and meet some guy and give him free what they would pay me for.

"Then there's the pill. Okay, it helps us all out but still it hurts, then there's other girls in the business (she motioned to a well-dressed competitor sitting by the door), and all sorts of incidental problems. I don't know, all I can say is that things have been tough lately."

From across the room B———— made an obvious motion. Sally gave me a wide smile, "Well, excuse me. I've gotta go to work."

Quickbucks Finale

The Capped Lad looked about the squalor of Quickbucks and felt like leaving Louella and Theda and Gloria and curly-haired Sean to their own devices; but suddenly the room became brightly lit, as if a lighting designer in a play suddenly went berserk. And the people changed, in a split-second, from grubby, ill-kempt dregs to sparkling dressed lads and lasses in dresses and skirts with pleats and sports jackets with padded shoulders. Rod Stewart faded and Helen O'Connor singing "Tangerine" filled the room.

After recovering from an immediate shock, the Capped Lad noticed he had changed to. He wore a brown herring-bone sports jacket and baggy white cotton trousers. He felt cool and loose, his incredible time change relaxed his body, cooled his senses and he sat back on the hard rubber stool and watched with awe. All the same faces were there, in exactly the same positions, but now they stood neatly attired in the styles of some twenty-years ago.

Theda now looked like Gene Kelly and Louella became a striking Rita Hayworth. Theda, in character, suddenly caught the rhythm of the music, now an upbeat Glenn Miller interpretation of "Johnny One-Note," and begin to dance across the linoleum floor of Quickbucks. The crowd parted and Theda took the center of the floor. The music then stopped and an up tempo melody came from the small combo now assembled on the small stage. Theda smoothly walked across the floor, grabbed Louella, and pulled her out beside him singing:

On through the night
Till the night is through
Let's keep right on dancing
Now that I'm with you
Do I like dancing?
Confidentially I do,
Deep in my arms
Never should we part
Heaven in my arms
Music in my heart.

The lights suddenly dimmed and Theda and Louella stood in a gold spotlight, they began rhythmically moving together, slowly at first, then erupting into a wild, frenzied boogie with the support of every last boy and girl in the chorus. It would have warmed Arthur Freed's heart, not to mention Vincente Minnelli's. The music was Harry James, cool, loud, and clear, and the dancers all were in perfect step. The Capped Lad felt himself on a MGM soundset, circa 1947 with all the bright lights, intense colors, and controlled coordination.

When this number exhausted itself from out of the wings, so to speak, came curly-haired Sean and Gloria, and Millie and Boychild. The boys were dressed in military array; Sean as an Army lad, and Boychild the seaman equivalent. Floria looked like a little girl (Deanna Durbin?) dressed in a blue and white polka dot dress, and Millie complemented her nicely in pleated red cotton. Millie and Boychild then began an exaggerated prance to the percussion introduction to their number and they sang a duet:

You're gonna love tomorrow
Stick around and see
You're gonna love tomorrow
I'm given you my personal guarantee
Say too-da--loo to sorrow
And fare--dee--well ennui
You're gonna love tomorrow
As long as you're tomorrow is spent with me.....

They continued with additional verses, then stepped back allowing Gloria and curly-haired Sean the stage to sing the joys of conjugal and marital bliss in a volley--like duet.

I may burn the toast
I may make a rotten host
You may, but no matter what goes wrong,
Love will see us through till something better comes along...

At the final bridge, the first couple joined in and the four sang a rather complicated conclusion, in counterpoint, to their little ode to joy. The music stopped for a beat, then loudly swelled about them, Louella and Theda returned out front, with the two couples and the entire company behind and they whipped their way into a finale, a tap speciality number almost dreamed up by Busby Berkeley...

The reviews the next morning weren't very good, Clive Barnes was especially hostile and the show closed in about a week. Louella returned to modeling, Theda to hairdressing and drug dealing, Gloria to an upper class school where she transferred, Boychild a photograper, curly-haired Sean a music critic, and the Capped Lad sort of just dropped out of sight. T'aint piss.

Nixon: Right Or Wrong

The question of relative morality is now largely the issue behind national division. Did Nixon act in conscience with an understanding of the political realities behind the Vietnam conflict? That is a prevailing question today which most of us seem to answer with an overwhelming "nay". Still, though, it is a decision which must be considered a moral one. For more on this conclusion, see page fifteen where Frank Baglione expresses his divergent view.

Poor Richard's Perspectives

Correspondences

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter with regards to the record reviews of Poor Richard's. It's all very nice and well to print long reviews of the "big" albums as those are the ones that the most people are interested in. However, I feel that you could do the people of this community a great service by publishing small reviews of the lesser-known albums. This would be an immense aid to the adventurous record buyer who goes into a store and sees dozens of albums by people he's never heard of before. A short review of fifty words or so would be a tremendous help to the record buyer. Since you must have access to a large number of albums and and ever-increasing number of record reviewers, I feel this could be accomplished with little pain. After all, with records costing four and five dollars a whack, you people could provide an invaluable service.

Finally, how about a short summery in next fall's first issue of just what kind of people are writing the record reviews? I mean, you could just have each reviewer give his 5 favorite groups and his five most despised ones. By doing this, the reader could get an idea of just what prejudices are brought to the review.

Thank You For Listening,

Henry N. Norvous

P.S. I have a suggestion for your name also. Why not change it to Epicene Bean Dream?

To the Editor:

This is just a little note to say that despite Steve Feld's fine article about Todd Rundgren, I haven't been to a better concert this year. Rundgren is going to be the next big rock star and if he isn't quite there yet, he's closer than any of his competition.

Mr. Feld wrote an interesting, funny, and comprehensive article which was worth reading despite its mistaken conclusions.

Thank you,

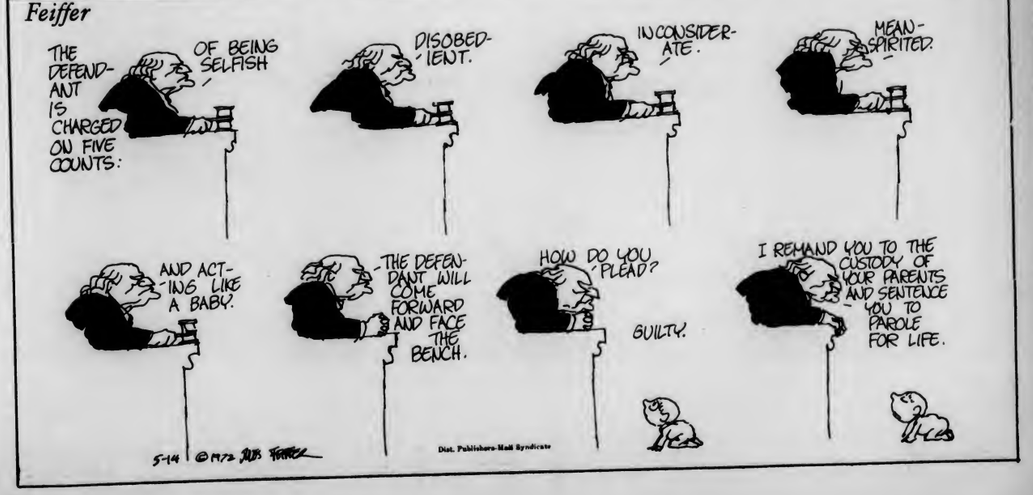
Benny Maas

On Nixon

There are two sets of objections which must be raised in regard to President Nixon's outrageous escalation of the Vietnam War. The first falls under a consideration of its possible effect as a military operation and the second pertains to American involvement in the war as a whole.

As an isolated military policy the American interdiction of supplies en route to North Vietnam is a worrisome one in several respects. First the President did not even ask the opinion of Congress let alone consult it on a formal basis concerning the decision which he, Kissinger, and Connally made in regard to the new American role in the war. This is, of course, right in line with the manner in which he and Johnson before him have ignored Congress in their conduct of the war. But Nixon's actions present an unually grave threat to the balance of power within the federal government which is, in many respects, the bulwark of the Democratic system. These actions are having and will continue to have important repercussions both at home and abroad. By such a blatant circumvention of the power of Congress to declare war Nixon is running the risk of crippling the American political process as it is outlined by the Constitution. Even Mayor Daley, a long time supporter of the war, has expressed disapproval over the President's disregard of Congress.

Secondly, in the realm of military effectiveness the decisions which Nixon announced on Monday evening are foolhardy. The Pentagon papers reveal that during the Johnson administration a study was conducted in order to establish the effectiveness of the kind of measures which Nixon is now taken. It was the conclusion of this study that any attempt on the part of the U.S. to prevent the delivery of supplies to North Vietnam would be a wasteful exercise in military beligerence and would have a negligible effect upon the ability of the Viet Cong to launch major offensives. It would be interesting to know what kind of reasoning has lead Nixon to assume that such measures will now be effective in the middle of such an offensive.



But aside from the fact that Nixon's actions will be entirely futile ones the more serious objections can be raised that they place a severe strain upon the already tenuous relations between the United States and the major Communist powers. Not only are the SALT talks and the upcoming Moscow summit meeting in jeopardy but Nixon is the risk of a confrontation with Soviet sea vessels. If such a confrontation were to occur it could lead to a major war with Russia and the possible consequences of such a war do not have to be pointed out. Surely American "honor", as Nixon inaccurately puts it is not worth fighting a nuclear war over.

Witlin the context of the war as a whole Nixon's actions not only represent the perpetration of American involvement in a grossly immoral war but also a virtual admission on his part that his long tauted Vietnamization program has been a dismal failure. The South Vietnamese, even with the benefit of extensive U.S. air support were steadily loosing ground to the advancing North Vietnamese prior to Monday night. This alone points to the incredible incompetence of our military leaders. It was only last week that General Abrams, in a cavelierly fashion, predicted that the South Vietnamese would be able to hold their own and Secretary of Defense Laird still finds the gall to contend that they have fought in a "credible" fashion. It is manifestly clear that these men, among many others, either have amazingly poor judgment or are corrupt liars. Whatever the case be they should be fired and in the case of Laird, impeached.

President Nixon does a great deal of talking about the honor of America. Unfortunately he equates honor with military supremacy irrespective of the political and moral context of this supremacy. From a political standpoint U.S. involvement in Vietnam is completely unjustified. Our policy there isa dusty relic left over from the donomo theory days of the 1950s.

From a moral standpoint it is abhorrent. There is no reason why the United States should involve itself in a local colonial war and in doing so it has perpetrated crimes against humanity which approach the magnitude of those committed by the Nazis in World War II. We should immediately disengage ourselves from Vietnam and Nixon's latest actions do not lead to the road of peace but serve only to prolong the decades of suffering which have irreparabley scarred the Vietnam people.

Turning Points

QUOTE OF THE WEEK:
President Nixon addressing the nation this past Monday.

An American defeat in Vietnam would encourage this kind of aggression all over the world--aggression in which smaller nations, armed by their major allies, could be tempted to attack neighboring nations at will, in the Mideast, in Europe and other areas.

World peace would be in grave jeopardy.

UMass will have two series of classical music concerts during the 1972/73 academic year.

Both series, under the auspices of the UMass Fine Arts Council, are designed to meet the needs of students and others in Western Massachusetts, according to Council Manager Terry Charles Schwarz.

The Celebrity Series will open Thursday, October 19, when the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormand offers a concert in Curry Hicks Cage.

Daniel Adni, Israeli-born pianist, will make his American debut in two concerts, November 9 and 10, Mr. Adni was discovered by Yehudi Menuhin fine years ago and made his orchestral debut last fall as soloist with The New Philharmonia Orchestra of London under the direction of Otto Klemperer. Since then, he has appeared with other orchestras on the British Isles and in recitals in Great Britain.

Christine Walevska, 23-year-old Los Angeles cellist, who will perform at UMass February 8 and 9, was recently signed to a three-year contract by noted impressario S. Hurok. Philips Records has also signed Miss Walevska to a long-term contract.

The Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre will return to the University March 6 and 7 for two fully staged performances of Benjamin Britten's opera "Albert Herring."

A visit by The Boston Philharmonia, April 26 and 27, will end the Celebrity Series. The Philharmonia has appeared at the University twice.

The 1972/73 UMass Chamber Music Series will begin October 4 with a visit by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York. The Fine Arts Quartet, quartet-in-residence at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, will be the second ensemble in this series and will be joined by pianist Frank Glazer, a member of the Eastman School of Music faculty and noted concert pianist. The Cleveland String Quartet is scheduled to perform November 30. The Melos Ensemble of London had been announced earlier as appearing March 10. However, due to the death of a key member of this group, The Melos Ensemble has cancelled its American tour. The Fine Arts Council is negotiating with The Boston Symphony Chamber Players to fill this concert. An April 10 visit by Quartetto Italiano will end the UMass Chamber Music Series.

Complete ticket information on both series is available from the UMass Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, Mass. Telephone (413) 545-0202. Information on the Council's series of dance, theatre and other events will be released shortly.

The Amherst Folklore Center this Saturday night will present Battle Hill tomorrow night.

The Join Hands Performers co-op and Biograph Records are pleased to offer BOTTLE HILL, five young men of incredable energy, imagination and musical ability who form, perhaps the most refreshing string band heard in a long time.

Bottle Hill plays bluegrass and country and folk and gospel and even square dance music. They incorporate contemporary songs and ideas into their own unique style and create a magnetism in the crazy atmosphere that surrounds every Bottle Hill concert, exemplified by the success they've had at colleges, coffee houses and festivals in eight states.

The group was founded in the summer of 1970 in the basement of the Hayes House, a well known folk coffee house in northern New Jersey. Founded as the "Bottle Hill Boys" (Bottle Hill was the colonial name of the New Jersey town in which they met) they quickly developed the bluegrass sound for which they are now known.

In a bylined article in the NEW YORK TIMES of Nov. 17, 1971, John S. Wilson said: "The Bottle Hill Boys, a quintet from New Jersey showed that bluegrass music is thriving far from its native pastures. The group has a spirited attack and two fine soloists in Lew London on banjo and Barry Mitterhoff on mandolin. And they are sufficiently unawed by tradition to sing in a lusty open fashion rather than the high tight style common to most bluegrass groups."

THE VILLAGE VOICE of March 9, 1972 said of another NYC concert...."The Bottle Hill Boys displayed a keen sense of what bluegrass music is and is not. Would you believe "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" and "Honkey-Tonk Woman" can be made to sound like Bill Monroe originals? Barry Mitterhoff on mandolin and Lew London on banjo and guitar still steal the show (except possibly for fiddle tunes Walt Michael plays on a hammered dulcimer)."

Also at the center tonight is a Contra dance with Dudley Laufman and Sunday night will feature music from the Montague Yoga Oshram.

Southwest will be presenting its first festival/happening on the Mall on May 13, 1972. It will be an attempt to transform the concrete atmosphere into a festive atmosphere through the use of geodesic structures, plastic inflatables, light shows in the tunnel, poetry readings, square dancing, and any kind of music people care to bring.

Also a troup show known as the First Transcendental Exposition will be here to put on what is definitely a professionally entertaining program. Their music is a blend of ancient Indian music and contemporary jazz, folk and rock. Some of their members have played with the Grateful Dead and George Harrison has produced their Radha Krisna Album on his Apple label.

These people travel in 5 buses and have been known to provide feasts which have fed ten thousand people in one day. They come from a self-sufficient communcal village called New Vrndavana which is located in the hills of West Virginia. The village is based on the conception Emerson called "plain living and high thinking."

Anyone who wants to help on this event or wants to set up tables to sell candles, leather things, etc., contact either Dave Elliott or the Bhakty Yoga Club, or Funyfarm Factory 6-8994.

"Kiss Me Quick, It's The End Of The World."

By FRANK BAGLIONE

Taking the time it takes to make the going good,

The Clown who mimes our expectations stood

On the basis of the information presently available

Preparing his last act for the empty bleachers....

Early this week President Nixon made an important decision concerning the conduct of American forces in Vietnam. His annoucement that the United States would mine and, in effect, blockade the ports of North Vietnam, as well as bomb rail lines coming from China, was at one time both shocking and expected. It had, by that time, become evident that the South Vietnamese forces, even with extensive U.S. air support, would not be able to successfully repulse the recent North Vietnamese invasion of their country. This circumstance forced the President's hand. In essence he had to make a political or moral decision as to how the united States would react to the very real possibility that the South Vietnamese government would be deposed by force. Surprising as it was to some, the President's decision was a moral one.

The conclusion that the President's decision to mine a nation's harbors and destroy its rail lines was a moral one may be difficult to understand. We do not tend to associate morality with Nixon, believing, rather, that morality is safely nestled within our own bosoms. Many chose to see the man in the White House as an ogre who has pursued the goal of American victory in Indochina with a nearly insane singleness of purpose turning aside every plea for humanity with contempt. At the same time this insance, immoral man is viewed as a "tricky" character who, by standing in the path blocking "good," is playing a shrewd political game calculated to win him support from the baser and unenlightened portions of our population. As a result he is seen as some sort of a double Mr. Hyde whose policy is incited by both insanity and a cold, calculating, malevolence.

The Dr. Jekyll aspect of President Nixon's character, however, is often ignored. After all, when we have finally found something which we are so sure is evil we do not appreciate the consideration by some that our hate object is not totally evil. It is far the more comfortable position to maintain our illusion that that is good, and that over there is evil. Black and white; please, no perplexing areas of grey; do not distrub our drive for humanity with compassion for humanness. Thus, no matter what President Nixon might have decided, especially if his sense of what is morally correct steered his decision, it would not have been acceptable in our new McGovernese moral consciousness, our new drive to eliminate all evil. And not once is it considered, as the historian Richard Hofstadter has said, "that an unbriddled passion for the total elimination of this or that evil can be as dangerous as any of the delusions of our time."

Some poking around seems called for. It can first be said that the President's decision was not a political one in any major way. True, there was the question of the power of the presidency in handling emergency matters, but the practical policital decision, had Nixon chosen it, would have been to dump the entire matter in the lap of the Congress. He could have asked our elected representatives to either give him their approval for the strong actions against the North which he took on his own, or to express their firm desire that America disengage herself from the conflict within a specified amount of time. No matter which way their decision went, the President would have arrived at a relatively safe political sanctuary from which he could say, depending on how events turned, either "I told you so," or "This was the Administration that brought the troops home." It might not have been the most acceptable manner in which to handle the war issue, but given the election year when this issue is the cause for such intense emotion, disgust, and utter weariness, it would have been the safest politically.

Instead the President chose to bear the entire responsibility himself, and to make his decision on the basis of a morality little understood, at least by some of our more evangelical humanists and philosophy professors. Nixon's is a gentleman's morality which views the world in neither an absolutely good or evil way. Rather it is a very complex combination of both the good and the evil, never clearly visible, never standing alone completely unsullied or corrupt. In such a morally perplexing world a man's sole hope of accomplishing some "good" is to find a system, or order, of loyalties that will create for him and others adhering to this order a structure that benefits the group. One such loyalty is to the state, in Nixon's case that structure which is called the American system. If any good is to be achieved and chaos deprived of its evil reign, then one must work in and for that system to which he owes his allegiance. Therefore, to a man such as Nixon, the so-called "higher law" to which some of his critics adhere, is a fool's conception. There is no higher law than that of the structure, state, or group in which one lives.

For Richard Nixon the American system is the one. It is the one he lives in, the one he knows best, the one which provides the necessary safety and order man needs to survive. Like other systems it is both good and bad; what makes America different, and better, is that it is his. To criticize such a man for his wanting America, through its vassal South Vietnam, to win is ludicrous. Of course he wants America to "win," to save face, to come out of this terribly confusing war with its influence intact. He finds it difficult to be ashamed of this desire. Indeed, he finds it highly commendable for one to cheer for the home team, to rally around one's fellow citizens, to fight for what is important to his own group. What is more, it is the right thing to do.

While many fret both day and night that North Vietnamese dikes may be bombed and thousands killed, that an American bomb might kill North Vietnamese civilians or sink a Russian ship, our President is more morally concerned with his own, his own sixty thousand troops left in Vietnam virtually as hostages before a massive North Vietnamese invasion, his own belief that a communist regime in South Vietnam would be horrible for the people of that country. With the communists there would be no chance for democracy, no freedoms. So if the North Vietnamese can bring their communistic equality on the tip of bayonets, then America can drop its freedoms from a plane. Both sides are doing a great deal of killing in the name of right. Both sides accept the injustice of their rockets and bombs being unable to differentiate between a soldier and a peasant woman because both believe that ultimately their system will prove to be the better one.

The President: "The conclusion that the President's decision to mine a nation's harbor and destroy its rail lines was a moral one may be difficult to understand."

So Richard Nixon is compelled by his morality to blockade North Vietnam, just as the morality of anti-war activists compel them to block a bridge between Northampton and Hadley. Both actions share varius aspects of intent, even if not magnitude. They are first both a moral action. Each is disruptive and costly (as in the case of Chicopee citizens bearing the financial burden of that morality which led demonstrators to block roads outside of Westover Air Force Base). Each carries a high emphasis on individual responsibility. And each is done with the aim of achieving some greater good. Finally, each is foolish. There is something revolting about people who wear their morality on their sleeve, or pin it on their jacket, or carry it in their hand. The self-righteous are highly interesting in that they often become the evil they presumably combat. Ignorance, intolerance, hate and the desire to intimidate, humiliate and dehumanize the opponent are too often the tools found in the hands of those blind zealots for good.'

At least it can be said for Richard Nixon that he seems to recognize that he is sometimes doing evil in pursuing good. No doubt this is because he comes from the real world, not from some university never-never land so far removed from reality that the total of its facilities reads like some academician's Disneyland.

There is the Center for Humanistic Studies ride, and the Center for Social Change trip, Black Studies land, Radical Studies land, Women's Studies land, and eventually there will no doubt be Peace Studies and Chicano Studies in sparkling new pavilions where dungareed professors ponder the massive implications of everything in a fifty-minute period. It is this atmosphere that produces people totally unequipped for the handling of reality or a way of life where "truth" is not easily approachable and clearly marked. People who will take the completely incongruous action of blocking the Northampton to Hadley bridge, who will slap the hand of any naughty boy desiring a military career through ROTC. Ultimately, people so mentally and rationally crippled that in order for them to survive they must be plowed back into this amusement park university as graduate students, and later, as professors, to run the rides themselves.

It is encouraging that some students survive their education, that they observe the riders but avoid taking too many rides themselves. With admirable perceptiveness they see the wisdom of giving their loyalty to things--to other people, to a group, to an institution, to their country--and hope that these things will generate more good than evil. If less morally satisfying, this choice is at least less futile and more productive than assuming an individual responsibility to some ephemeral concept of good in a world where good and evil are so intertwined, so clouded, so relative that they become in the end what is derisively called a "do-gooder."

Richard Nixon has decided to take forceful action in Vietnam. George McGovern puts on his magician's robes and perceives the ingredients of World War III. Students drop out of their trees in absolute frenzy. It is a company of fools, everywhere we are surrounded by fools. Only the clowns survive the foolishness seeing everything in smoke, in the clouds and grey that hide the inaccessable truth, good and evil. The clowns going from one circus to another perceiving glimpses of the total absurdity in each, in themselves, and knowing when it is time to leave.

Taking the time it takes to make the going good,

The Clown who mimes our expectations stood

On the basis of the information presently available

Preparing his last act for the empty bleachers.

In smoke he came, in smoke he shall go.

Goging up in smoke is going up nonetheless

Eventually to settle somewhere in a new guise.

To those few souls who stayed to see his going

He said, "JKiss me quick, it's the end of the world!'"

And as a parting jest, left them with themselves.

Hey Concert! Hey Concert Ova Heah!

By MIKE KOSTEK

Did you have a good time at the 1972 Spring Concert? Did you get your $9000 worth? The only people who gained from Sunday's concert was SOS, who came up with over $5000 for a good cause. According to WHYN radio, "15,000 people thronged to Alumni Stadium in Amherst Sunday afternoon for a rock concert featuring Fleetwood Mac and Ashton, Gardner, Dyke & Company. Reports say there was no trouble..."

A classic media simplification. Did you throng? Now 15,000 people throng to a Who concert, but they don't throng for an afternoon of mediocre music.

According to Kenneth Sulin in The Collegian, "The concert seemed a success...this was simply a trial concert, a stepping stone that would forecast the possibilities of any performance in the future."

That says, in effect, that the show was good because it was so mediocre that no one got excited enough to do any trashing, smashing or gate crashing (at a free concert?).

UMass has had a rich and tragic history concerning rock concerts. I have been to many, many shows, but I've never seen any to compare with the fine series that UMass hosted from 1969-1971 in terms of price and artist quality. Look at these:

Sly and The Family Stones, Tony Joe White--$3.50. Ten Years After, Three Dog Night (well...)--$2.50. Jethro Tull, Johnny Winter, Spooky Tooth--$3.50. Steve Miller. B.B. King, Dreams--$2.75. Traffic, Buffy St. Marie, David Frye--$4.00. Jefferson Airplane with their own lightshow, Head Lights—$3.50.

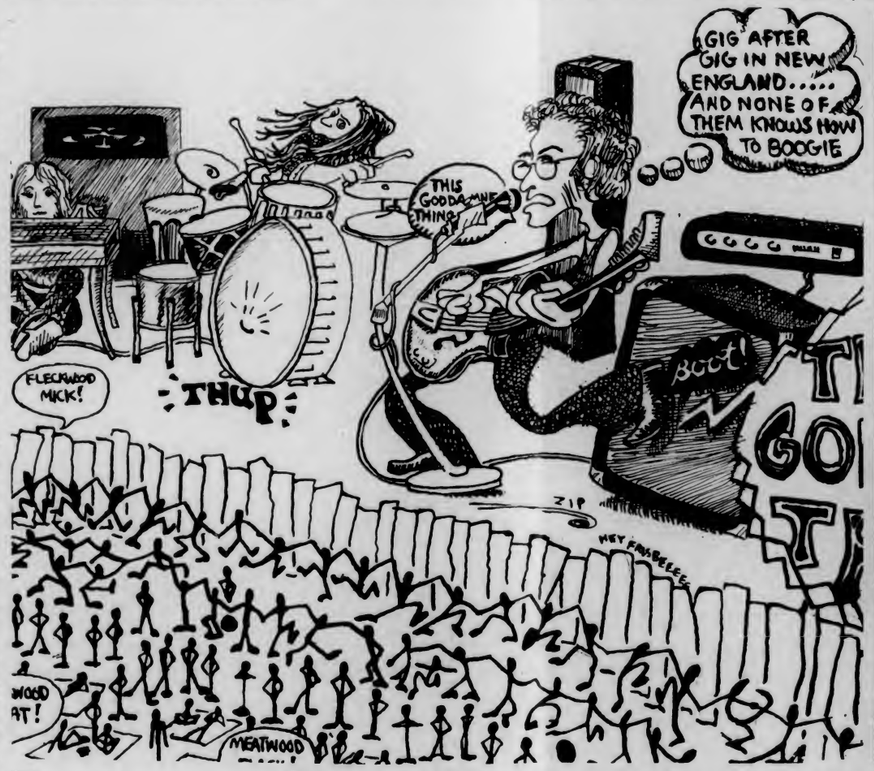
I remember there was a long lull in the action after Spooky Tooth had played at the Tull-Winter-Tooth show, and we sat waiting and waiting for Jethro. About an hour passed and neither Tull or Johnny had arrived, so a relatively unknown group that was touring the area called The Allman Brothers set up their stuff and were just about to play when Winter arrived...

Oh, those halcyon days! of course it was those 4000 idiots who just had to see Traffic who are now responsible for the musically-barren year now past. Those fools who gained access to the Cage with the axes and crammed over 10,000 people into the Cage. 10,000 people in the Cage! Since that dank winter night there's been a ban on big concerts. Rasaan Roland Kirk takes the prize for Finest Concert, 1971-1972 season. Kirk was truly excellent, but only 3000 or so people could cram into (and I say CRAM) the Student Union Ballroom for the two shows he gave.

Those 4000 idiots made it necessary for the UMass concert-goer to venture to the depths to hear good quality rock music. Yes, the imfamous Paramount in Springfield was the only bastion for live music over this past year. The talent was good: The Allman Brothers, Savoy Brown, Dr. John, Captain Beefheart, Hot Tuna, John Baldry and Fleetwood Mac, but except for the Captain (who was $2.00) the prices were less than genteel ($4.50 -5.50) and the atmosphere is always enough to make you think twice. Paramount holds only 1500 or so at a whack, I'm sure that all of the people who played there could have appeared at UMass with no problem.

So, it is that 1971-1972 was a silent year of sorts, in regards to big name rock entertainment (save for Todd Rundgren's horror show and last Sunday's sprawl), although there were several excellent jazz concerts and a few fine folk shows at the Folklore Center in town. However, we are given many statements saying that Sunday showed that we can be good and not eat up the stadium and look out for next year...I wonder.

Remember Steve Comolli's flowing words in the February 4, 1972 issue of Poor Richard's? Some of them read like this: "The stadium holds 20,000 as compared to the Garden's 16,000, Boston's largest facility. New York's largest concert hall, Madison Square Garden, can only (only?) hold 22,000, a mere 2000 more than our facility. We have potentially one of the country's largest concert arenas....Once we learned how to run a successful concert, then we could have some of the best live rock shows ever done in the U.S."



He then paints a pretty picture of 20,000 souls shelling out $60,000-80,000 for The Who or The Faces which would "properly finance the concert and to provide competent and complete security measures."

This is all very nice, but who says that concerts in Boston Garden are so terrific anyway? Last time The Band and Taj Mahal, a fine bill, played Boston Garden they sold about half the house. I just hope Steve and the rest of the Concert Committee got a chance to go and sit in the bleachers Sunday. I did, and it was no prize. The stage could be easily picked out from amongst the crowd, but recognition of the performers was non-existent. Now it's fine to walk in for free and drink your beer and sit and relax because you don't care about the groups that much, but those who will pay three or four dollars will not be happy when they won't be able to tell Mick Jagger from Mick Taylor. All the people in the crowd who cared about seeing and/or hearing Fleetwood Mac rushed up at the end. Remember how cramped it got? You didn't like standing up? You thought those dupas who stood up were pretty damn selfish to block the view of thousands behind them? Well, what do you want? To spoil the fun of those pushy hundreds who want to really get into the music? You pig! All right, all those who care about Fleetwood Mac got on the lawn and compacted into a tight group. Who likes The Who? What percent of the crowd would really like the Who enough to rush the stage as on Sunday? It wouldn't be pretty.

As for the sound in the bleachers, it was altogether different from that on the field (remember now, it was reported in Monday's Collegian that there were 10,000 in the stands and 5000 on the field). Besides the awful choice of using the Alfred H. Glickman Music Shell that removed all sparkle from the guitars and all crispness from the drums all over the place, the bleachers got a tinny mash of echoing sound. I don't know whether it was the mix or the P.A., or the shell or the funny way concrete plays with amplified sound or a conspiracy of all four, but what most people in the bleachers got was a fuggy pancake of noise.

The night before there was a terrific swell of enthusiasm and expectation around campus. It seemed that people really wanted to see a fantastic concert, because a fantastic concert is something we can all believe in. Even Little Konopka, a noted concert-goer from Greefield was there. A lost of "smack freaks" from Malden came Saturday night and looked for lodgings in and around Greenough House. No, UMass does not draw such ratty faces every day. The people from Malden were denied the comfort of Greenough's hallways, but it was still as if the dorm was under siege, with uglies and people milling and mixing it up all night. Whether from hunger or revenge or idleness, they broke into Greenough's snack bar and stole some candy bars. No friends, UMass attracts such visitors for one and only one reason: Concert.

Since I believe that the best way to see a concert is to really see the stage, my companions and I set out to El Alumni Legion Stadium and sat down about forty bodies away from Alfred H. Glickman's memorial at 11:30. And waited. And waited. And waited. The rain, or the threat of it, kept the crowd very small (no more than 5000) right up to show time.

I don't know why, but I still believe that when they say the concert will begin at 1:11, it will begin at 1:11. I hear Fleetwood Mac would go on between 3 and 4, and I believe it. Fool.

Well, it was only twenty minutes past one when McKendree Spring walked onstage. I can see no excuse for their existence. They are sad, sloppy, uninteresting and somehow managed to provide the best moments of the entire affair, when the fiddler played with his magic electronic box and twisted dials to the crowd's and my delight. It was so good, so schtreeeeeeeeching, so powerful, so unworkdly. Now I know it didn't take much talent tweizzling all those knobs, but it was the most gratifying electrical music explosion that I've seen since Hendrix destroyed all ears at Woodstock with his air raid Anthem.

Still, one yowling song "God Bless The Conspiracy" does not make a good act and the Spring had exhausted their talent and originality with that outburst. They played until 2:00 and people were once again left to their own devices to entertain themselves. Fact is that the sun came out just as McKendree hit the stage, so I look on them in a favorable light. Actually, that was the highlight of the day.

Wait, wait, wait. Sit & fidget. Drink your beer, smoke your wacky tobacky, read your Rolling Stone. Sit and get damp. Throw your frisbee, bye-bye, you'll never get it back. Pat the dog, blow your balloons, blow your bubbles. Put up your POT sign. Wait. Wait. Tell your gradeschool jokes: "Why aren't baseball players going to use bats any longer?" "Because they're long enough already!" Watch the people around you. "Hey FRISBEE! Hey! Fisibee ovah HEERE!! "Go buy some soda from SOS. Read your Rolling Stone "Oooh, look at that centerfold of David Cassiday!"

Ashton, Gardner, Dyke & Co. got on, and they promised to be good. They were okay, but a disappointment, as they failed to recreatetheir precise playing that made their album, What A Bloody Long Day It's Been fairly good. The mix managed to lose Tony Ashton's piano completely, and muddled up his vocals to a great degree. There is one fantastic somg on the album, called "It's A Drag, I'm A Drag", and it is truly an incredible piece, with Ashton screaming his nodes out, backed by tight and manic playing. So I wanted him to scream his insides out on stage, as rock and roll played live must always have some demonic fire and flash to make it great. But when "It's A Drag, I'm A Drag" came around, Tony selfishly chose to preserve his career, and didn't come through and turn his vocal chords to spaghetti for us. Also missing from the live version was that great DEEDEEDALEET high pitched guitar line that permeates all and pushes the song up, up, off the edge of normalcy. But there are no overdubs on stage, and the guitarist had to play the rhythm part, so "It's A Drag, I'm A Drag" came and went without setting fire to the hair of the people in the front row. It didn't even singe the snow fence.

AGD&Co. finished up and we had an hour wait while Fleetwood Mac could reach the stage, due to various litigations and negotiations. Their finest moment on stage was right at the start, with little Danny Kirwan kicking it off with some great circular chording that gave such a nasty, harsh, mean WAHAINAWHAIHABWAAAAHA BWAAAAAHHHH and so loud that you could feel it. Bone-rattling. They rocked nicely through "Tell Me All The Things You Do", followed by a nice, power-fragile song, "Future Games". But them,

"Boom Boom", said Mr. Drum.
"Thump Thump," said Mr. Bass.
"Twang Twang," said Mr. Guitar I.
"Strum Strum," said Mr. Guitar II.

When Fleetwood Mac began their career way back then, they were another poor, white (off-color) English blues band who were rightfully ignored (See "Can Blue Men Sing The Whites?" by the Bonzo Dog Band for an insightful, delightful look at this subject). I don't know why they chose to dredge up their past with this dreck, but in any case it was a terrible song. Totally nondescript. "See? We can play da blooze!"

How does Christine McVie justify her existence in the band? She never would have been sitting at the keyboard if Peter Green were still around, as she can neither sing nor play. For that matter, no one in the group can sing. Now if you're going to be a great band you've got to have at least one fantastic talent, and the more the better. Something great, whether it be singing or playing or writing or arranging or leaping about charismatically. I guess Fleetwood Mac are good enough arrangers, but they can't be called great in any of those categories. Oh, they can and do sing okay, but who can't (and doesn't) sing rock? They play well, with the dual guitars being their strong suit, but Peter Green could easily put Kirwan or Bob Welch, the other guitarist, to bed. No, since Green and firey Jeremy Spencer left, most of the Mac's talent left with them. So the group wisely changed from "bone-rattling blues rave-ups, three chord rock and roll, and fragile melodic stuff" to just fragile melodic stuff which consists of a simple ditty with one or two "hooker lines" overlaid with fine production and tasty studio playing. However, what's good in the studio isn't always good outside, and what we are left with live is glorified pop. The Moody Blues with class, if you will. The lyrics are often trite and simple, with Earth-shaking messages like "keep that soul beat a-shakin'" or "we live in a time where meaning falls and splinters from our lives" Oh, so meaningful. On record they're not bad, in fact they're quite good. But live is another thing.

Kenny Sulin

Kenny Sulin

Notice how their set progressed: a couple of their best good, rocking, fragile ditties, the terrible blues, and then a call for us to boogie. We don't give indications of going berserk, so they try to show us down with some classic boogie numbers, "Shake Your Money-Maker", "Black Magic Woman" (jealous because Santana did it better than they), and finally the fantastic "Oh Well". All three songs were written by no one in the current band, and they were performed without the needed power and enthusiasm to get us up. Imagine the old Mac, with Green. Imagine The Who or Tull or Hendrix or NRBQ or The Allman Brothers having to ask the crowd to get up! No, a good band doesn't have to ask.

What came about was a clean-out dichotomy, with the few thousands clustered around the stage enjoying the music, but not going wild either, while those in the seats lost interest and left during "Oh Well". After a half-hearted round of applause, the band returned and did a nice jam, that got thousands more up on their feet and heading for the exits. Before Fleetwood Mac left the stage, there were more people outside the stadium than there were in. I have never seen that happen before.

As even the geeks in front of us discovered as they alternated yelling "Rockanroll" and "Hey Frisbee", Fleetwood Mac lacked the powerpunch to satisfy 15,000 people in a stadium who had been waiting more than five hours to see them. Whatever superstar status they had around here went flying into the cloudy blue.

All right, all right, it was a trial concert, just a small affair so that next year we can really rip it up. No. The concert Sunday proved nothing. All it showed was that 15,000 bored students will come to spend a fairly nice Sunday afternoon for free, will drink their wine and will behave nicely for mediocre groups. They will sit quietly and smoke their dope with little fuss as there were no oinkers in the stadium, and will leave early when they get bored, cold and hungry.

But you will not have the same atmosphere with the Stones or the Grateful Dead. It will be entirely different as the security will be, by necessity, choking in its efficiency, and that is how riots start. And 20,000 people will not sit quietly when Peter Townshend starts leaping about.

Looking back on the year-long struggle to get Sunday's show, it all seems so sad. All the battles with the Athletic Council, the hours and hours of work and planning done by the Concert Committee, all the effort put into this just doesn't seem worth what Sunday gave us. We did get into the stadium, long a holy ground, but we know now that the stadium is a lousy place to hold a concert. How many groups like playing in Madison Square Garden? How many people like paying $4.50 to sit four miles away in the Garden?

No, another answer is needed. It does indeed look like we're going to have to suffer if we're ever going to see The Who here. If the stadium is the best we can do, I say look out.

Finally, you 4000 cretins, you put us in the stadium. You took away Hot Tuna, The Allmans, Dr. John, Captain Beefheart, etc.; and maybe The Faces, any of which would have made Sunday's concert look like peanuts. But Sunday was the best we could do, thanks to you saps, and the future remains as cloudy as it was Sunday.

Since I believe that the best way to see a concert is to really see the stage, my companions and I set out to Alumni Legion Stadium and sat down about forty bodies away from Alfred H Glickman's Memorial at 11:30. And waited. And waited. And waited. And waited.

A Musical Tour de Force

By STEVE FELD

Manassas--Stephen Stills (Atlantic Records)

Legend has it that there's a small town in Alabama by the name of Manassas, where people love the one they're with and then change partners. Into this quaint village rambled one Stephen Stills, a freind of us all who had just written a handful of catchy tunes and was looking for a band to play them with. So he called his old friend Chris Hillman of Byrds and Flying Burrito Brothers fame, drummer Dallas Taylor and bassist Fuzzy Samuels also came into the scene, both having been in the most famous non-group of all time--Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young. To this rock and roll stew add some spice in the forms of Paul Harris, Al Perkins, and Joe Lala, all relative newcomers, but all good. Let it brew for a while and soon you'll find yourself with a multi-versed, well-rounded, heavy playing rock group--the best since Derek and the Dominoes. Call them Manassas.

On the occasion of his third solo album, Steve Stills has provided us with a mixed bag, four sides full. It includes, for starters, the sweetest country-rock since Sweetheart of the Rodeo, and the hardest rock since Layla.

Manassas is Steve Stills' coming of age, a musical tour de force. He wrote or co-wrote every song but one, twenty-one in all. Each side has a separate title, and is devoted to songs of the same mood or style. It's an ambitious undertaking which seems to be after listening to Steve Stills and Steve Stills II, a record and a half too long. But, it isn't! Manassas comes out as a true measure of Stills' talents, and a fully-realized double album, with lots of goodies for your listening pleasure.

Side one' The Raven is the hard stuff, but the least noteworthy. "Song of Love" is preditable, laden with worn out riffs and driveling lyrics; "Cuban Bluegrass' helps bring it s counterpart "Rock & Roll Crazies" up out of the doldrums of its, once again, worn out riffs. "Jet Set (Sigh)" is tight, driving blues that picks up considerably; "Anyway" cuts the mark as just mediocre. Stills and Hillman collaborated on the last cut, a sensitive and open love song "Both of Us (Bound to Lose)". The two guitarists exchange lead vocals royally, making it the most satisfying song of its kind since the Manuel "Belfast Cowboy" Morrison duel on Cahoots.

Put on Side two, The Wildreness, and you'll hear some country rock a la Steve Stills. "Fallen Eagle" is a barnyard jig with tongue-in-cheek wildlife preservation lyrics, concluding that "This country isn't safe anymore/That's for sure." "Jesus Gave Love Away for Free' has deep harmonies, reminiscent of CSN&Y, in gospel. The gem of the side is "Colorado", an easy swinging song with backup vocal delay and when Stills is singing the title lends a rich authenticity. "So Begins the Task" continues in the easy listening country atmosphere, done in falsetto with a smooth steel guitar.

"Hide It So Deep" and "Don't Look at My Shadow" are pure country tunes, written by Steve Stills, but you can't help notice the Chris Hillman influence. Manassas is Stills' first serious delve into country on record, while Hillman's roots are deep into C&W. He, alone, swayed a group (The Byrds) to totally abandon their original style, rock, and to try a little country. It can be heard on Sweetheart of the Rodeo, an album that many think is the Byrd's finest to date. Either way, Stills, the shitkicker, successfully shines on The Wilderness.

The further we get into Manassas, the better it gets. Side three is entitled Consider, and it has something that Steve Stills never gave us before on his solo albums--six good songs on one side. "It Doesn't Matter" brings back memories of the old Byrds, opening up things on a high standard that prevails throughout the side. Right on its heels is "Johnny's Garden" which sounds as delightful as its title. It's pure, undistilled Stills singing an absolutely charming song about the pleasures of the quite life, listen to the chorus:

"And I'll do anything I got to do;
Cut my hair and shine my shoes,
And keep on singing the blues
If I can stay here-in Johnny's Garden."

The songwriting credit for "Bound to Fall" is given to M. Brewer, the only song not composed by Stills. "Bound to Fall" is less than two minutes, and serves as a fitting introduction to "How Far", another gem with a bouncy chorus. "Move Around" is the best song on the side being simply, a striking composition. The vocals sound distant, a man singing about the only true fulfillment of life; moving around, seeing and doing as much as there's time for. It's a masterpiece in every way, composition, construction, production. "Move Around" is the most realized song on Manassas. Rolling Stone Bill Wyman stops by to co-write a song with Stills, and to play bass on it, it's called "The Love Gangster", a rocker with a resonant wah-wah where we get Stills the hound dog, wailing the blues into the night.

Side four brings it all back home: Rock & Roll is Here to Stay. It is the most likeable and popular of the four sides. There are four brilliant songs, back to back, with hardly a moment's breather in between. "What to Do" is a funky rocker that gives Stills a chance to really let go on vocals, and he puts out while everybody joins in on the chorus:

"I'm not the one to tell you
What to do
I have no desire to run your life.
Do your thing, you know
What to do
Just don't let nobody tell you no lies."

Half-way into the song we get some soaring fiddle riffs and the band plays their ass off.

"Right Now" is the cut that reminds me of Layla opening with a "Nineteenth Nervous Breakdown" type guitar lick which just takes off from there. The chords and minor key are similar to Hendrix's version of "All Along the Watchtower." The last verse is enchanting, with Stills screaming words in a rapid pace as the band behind him builds up ax:

"The past isn't anymore
The future only has in store
And round and round and round it goes
And where it stops nobody knows
As far as I can tell
The only game in town is going down
And only happening Right Now!"

A half-second's pause and it's "The Treasure (Take One)", the album's long rocker that CSN&Y will undoubtedly perform if they ever tour again. The lyrics tell of a man torn between two women, but in his repose, contemplates the treasure of love:

"For the treasure of the oneness
That like sand becomes a diamond
Before the wind."

In the last verse, the man, with many questions and no answers, becomes bitter, and in his misery becomes sympathetic:

"For the treasure of the oneness
Then becomes sand and there lies naked
Before the wind."

A rhythm change during the guitar break is professionally executed lending itself to some new changes that help carry the song along.

The side and the album, close with an anthem, "Blues Man", which is a tribute to Jimi Hendrix, Al Wilson, and Duane Allman. "Blues Man" is in the fine tradition of "Black Queen", just the man and his guitar displaying a grandiose production, Stills' singing is mournful and true, while his lyrics are cogent and terse:

"Blues man, play your hand
Do it right, come on strong;
Don't stay long.

"Runnin' scared, y'run everywhere
Could not chose where to hide
Play the blues."

Stills guitar lines are simple, not fancy, and make the song flow together, similar to "Word Game" on Steve Stills II. The last verse is the strongest, sung by a blues man about his friends, as only a true blues man could:

"Blues is mean, the real thing
Three good men I knew well
Never see again...."

With the arrival of Manassas Steve Stills finally emerges as the consummate artist he is: truly one of the best. What seemed to be the main fault on his previous solo albums, mediocre materia, is overcome by leaps and bounds on Manassas. Nothing gives more pleasure than to see one' potential being reached, and that's the whole story behind Stephen Stills and Manassas.

King of Hearts

By BARRY WHITE

Todd Rundgren: "Something/Anything?" Bearsville 2 BX 2066 (90 minutes)

The ringing of the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia was the only significant musical event to happen upon that city for nearly two hundred years. It took Frankie Avalon, Chubby Checker and American Bandstand to break that city out of it's musical doldrums and in the late sixties, a flashy fizz called Nazz emerged to singe it's musical autograph on the progressive pages of rock and roll. From this musical litter, only the Runt, Todd Rundgren, managed to rise above the limits imposed on him and like Mozart, Dylan and Jagger, he is no longer like a hurtin' puppy. Whether he is cynical or optimistic, Todd Rundgren is living in this world just like you and me, and every once in awhile, he'll stop and reflect, giving us an album, here and there.

Like friendship, a good book or your favorite candy, Todd grows on you and becomes better and better as time goes on. His third solo album, Something/Anything?, is here and let's leave it at that. He includes songs that tell tales of woe, hope for future, love songs as pretty as "Michelle", love songs from the good ol' grinding days of the late fifties and early sixties, and Todd's fantasies-turned-realities maniacal songs. His lyrics are easy. Why there is even an honest-to-goodness, non-subliminal drug song on this! And it's about freaking out, too. If you have a high reverence for life, you'll enjoy Todd.

On Something/Anything?, Todd plays all the instruments, produces and arranges it all. And it's no fault but his that he does. Only on the fourth side does he employ other musicians. Musically, it is both easy and beautiful, and hard and bitchin' as well as passing through a thousand musical cosmos on its way. Whatever your musical tastes are, Todd puts that riff in there somewhere for you. His hit song, "I Saw the Light", has that melody that you've heard so many times before but you still can't figure out what it is. "Wolfman Jack" is definitely a Martha

Jim Lawrence

Reeves and The Vandellas song. "Sweeter Memories", is a slow reflecting out-the-window blues song. Todd's whimsical boyish nature is apparent in "The Night the Carousel Burnt Down," which like the film Yellow Submarine, is really meant to be appreciated by the Sunday children's matinee crowd. "Little Red Lights" has the anti-hero racing down Interstate 95 in New Jersey, which ends up with a chase, and ultimately, (like Jean-Paul Belmondo in Breathless running for his life), death. But that's where he wanted to be anyway. After having listened to all the pains of being an adolescent that Todd so aptly sings about on the first three sides, the listener is greeted with the fourth side, which turns out to be loosely structured pop operetta, angelically entitled "Baby Needs a New Pair of Snake-Skin Boots." It all ends up with a sick and sleezy satire song, "Slut," which would make even Keith Richard's ears perk up and listen.

Todd Rundgren has an obsession with dynamite as is evidenced on the back cover of his first album, Runt, and the poster for his new one. It reads: "Go ahead. Ignore me," with Todd holding a lighted match in one hand and guess what in the other, all with a cute sardonic smile wrapped on his face. And once a dynamite fuse is lit, it will only be a matter of time. After all, whoever heard of Laura Nyro, Rod Stewart, Herbe Hancock, the Allman Brothers, or Aretha Franklin four or five years ago, besides a devoted few? Probably, it's much simpler. All Todd Rundgren wants to do is light up the rock and roll souls we all possess and make life a little happier for everyone.

"Who Are These People ?"

This is what you've all been waiting for: our final issue and our final contest. We hope to have more next year, but in the meantime if you can correctly identify the five artists above, you make off with a real gem! Harry Chapin's "Taxi".

Whether you've heard of him or not makes no difference. It's all in good fun. Just remember that this contest is not open to "Poor Richard's" or "Collegian" staff and their immediate family. Get in your entry right away by mailing it to "Poor Richard's" obscure little office. Contest void where prohibited by law.

Looking Glass

By FRANK JOHNSON

LOOKING GLASS. Epic Records

The Epic/CBS recording group has frequently come up with some interesting rock musicians, and Looking Glass seems to be no exception. Looking Glass appears not only to be the name of the group, but the name of the premiere album. The work "Looking Glass" has been the subject of many literary studies; one early example can be found in the works of Lewis Carroll, and a more recent one is John Le Carre's "Looking Glass War". War is not a leitmotif for this rock group, however. Not only do they not sing against war per se, but their sound is subdued, studied, and it can certainly be said that Looking Glass does not fight a decibel war, a criticism that can be levelled at many struggling rock groups.

Looking Glass is a foursome composed of: Elliot Lurie on guitars, Larry Gonsky on keyboards, Piet Sweval on Bass, and Jeff Grob on drums. These men prove to be versatile musicians, as they are equally at home with harder, faster rock numbers such as the intial song, "Jennie-Lynne", and also softer, mellower tunes like the concluding number, "One by One". The material lying in between is a varied assortment of very pleasant tunes that seem to concern mostly subjects endemic to the New Jersey area. One of the liner notes expresses thanks to "the People of New Brunswick". On Side One, one of the songs is entitled "Catherine Street", which runs through New Brunswick. On Side II, the fate of an unemployed trainman is narrated in the fine song, "From Stanton Station", located on the New Jersey Railroad (it is not specified whether this railroad is the Jersey Central or the Penn-Central, both of which travel through the area).

In general, peoples' reaction to New Jersey is not a favorable one, as their first introduction to the "Garden State" is provided by noxious fumes from incinerators adjacent to the N.J. Turnpike near Newark Airport, or else the gently wafting vapors from the pig slaughterhouses by Secaucus. While not imbued with staggering virtuoso techniques, Looking Glass makes for very pleasant music that is sure not to offend anyone. In a word, Looking Glass's sound is mellow. This quality might turn a few people off, but it didn't turn me off; quite the contrary. I was particularly impressed with:

"From Stanton Station", on Side II. Besides bemoaning the tribulations of railroad men out of work (and probably students out of work, too), the music on this song was fine, professional, and subtle. In fact, as rock groups go, Looking Glass is indeed certainly well on its way to professional status. While at present I could not honestly say that they compete with the best, I can at least easily maintain that, judging by the good music on their premiere ablum, Looking Glass will one day find their place in the sun, shining brightly.

McLean Survives Two Obstacles

Singer Surmounts Irritated Crowd and a Bomb Scare

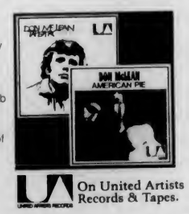
By DON HECKMAN
New York Times

A performer who can survive a bomb scare and an antagonistic audience must be something special. Singer-songwriter Don McLean came on stage at Columbia University's Wollman Auditorium Friday night and was greeted by listeners who were justifiably angry about the garish, bright spotlights beaming down on them. "Some friends" were filming Mr. McLean, and their need for appropriate lighting apparently took precedence over the audience's comfort. Associated with a performer whose psychic antennas are usually highly sensitive to rudeness, it was a peculiarly thoughtless action.

As if that wasn't enough, halfway through the program Mr. McLean was interrupted by a man who unceremoniously asked everyone to look under their chairs for "strange or unusual looking packages." Wow. Only a truly magical performer could have kept me -- and doubtless many others in the audience -- in the hall after so many hassles. But Mr. McLean is magical.

He sang his current hit "American Pie," of course, but he also sang two particularly impressive older tunes, "Three Flights Up" and "Circus Song." He led his listeners through an enthusiastic interpretation of the old folk round "Babylon" he played super guitar and banjo and he sang beautifully. His songs -- almost all of which are written with the pen of a poet and the voice of a minstrel -- are the centerpiece of his art, and they have as direct and pertinent a message for right-here-today young people as those of any contemporary songwriter I can think of.

The bomb scare and the distracting film lights faded quickly from my mind at the end of the program. But Don McLean's music hasn't. I expect to be hearing it for a long, long time.



Don McLean in Concert

Letter to the Editor
Buffalo Evening News

"...I am not a fan of Don McLean, or wasn't before Sunday. I liked "American Pie," but knew little of McLean or his work before then.

I sat in the balcony, quite physically alienated from the lone man on stage, with no particular expectations but curiosity, until step by step his words, melodious voice, his attitude, sensitivity, candor, and sincerity brought my weary mind to a warm reception of McLean's works. Just as we discovered and respected the music of Bob Dylan, Simon and Garfunkel, Gordon Lightfoot, or Carole King, so has everything I saw of Don McLean seeped into and warmed my musical sense."

An Oscar For Andy And Holly?

Women In Revolt
A film from the Factory by Andy Warhol; with Candy Darling, Jackie Curtis, and Holly Woodlaw.

BY BOB NESTI

In June of 1968 a radical feminist named Valerie Solanas shot and seriously wounded Andy Warhol at his studio-workshop called the Factory. Warhol recovered from the injury, yet remained silent about the incident, that is until the Factory's latest film Women In Revolt. It is a thinly veiled vendetta against Ms. and the radical fringes of the women's movement couched in a pseudo-Hollywood styled vehicle for three of the Factory's biggest super stars. Like nearly all of Warhol's films, Women In Revolt is excessive, simple minded, purposively amateurish, obscure, and ridiculous, yet does contain the innate elements of style, humor and fascination which make Warhol's "fag-drag" ennui of interest to more than limited audience.

Much of the success comes from the characterizations of Holly Woodlawn, Jackie Curtis, and Candy Darling as the film's three bedragled heroines. Each comes from a different social millieu: Holly a high-fashion model, Candy a Park Avenue socialite, and Jackie, a Staten Island schoolteacher who are all attracted to the Women's Liberation movement and become close friends through meetings of a group called P.I.G. (Politically Active Girls). Jackie, especially, becomes very much involved and attempts to induce (and seduce) the lustful and the bitchy, wealthy Candy into the organization. It is P.I.G. which most resembles Mr. Solanas radical organization S.C.U.M. and Warhol's intent seems to have been to freely satirize the dishonesty of that group's extreme hatred of men. Each scene is filled with a female character mouthing the cliches of the Movement only to eventually realize their dislike was only fiegned.

The plot meanders around this satirical premise; Jackie chastises Holly for her compulsion to pick-up men only to lose her virginity, quite willingly, to Mr. America. Candy espouses the rhetoric of the movement while "fucking" her way to success as a film actress. The point of Women In Revolt is malicious towards the ultra-feminists, first showing them as confused fools then as insipid hypocrites, but is honestly sympathetic to the more common problems women face in an urban society. The exploitation is cliched, but not because it is overuse, rather because it is so endemic to our culture. The portrayal is sharp, often viscious mimicry of three feminine prototypes steaped in the Hollywood tradition. Nothing much happens other than defining grosse caricatures who camp their way through a thin plot. Warhol's only distinguishing characteristic is his passivity. He doesn't direct, he records, and the results pivot on his performers ability to be more active and interesting than the means onto which they arrive on film.

The three leading female roles are engagingly portrayed by three of a different gender who, at least in two cases, deceive the audience to this point. The fact that these are three men seriously playing three women and getting away with it is bizarre enough to be of interest, but to be entertaining, the three must prove their talent and Women In Revolt is a showcase for each's finer qualities. Jackie Curtis has the look of a truck driver in drag and approaches his role with machete. He is the least concerned with playing a feminine role and stomps rather than sashays his way from a militant lesbian, who attacks construction workers in the street to inflict upon them her mammoth dildo, to the wife and mother of Mr. America. He plays the exasperated heroin with a brash authority. Her complement is the Holly Woodlawn in the part to end all second-banana feminine roles. Holly has appearing a victim of circumstances beyond control down to an art. Her face covers nearly every aspect of her compulsive ways with complete, delightful abandon.

Contrasted to these two broadly-played parts is the demure socialite Candy Darling who camps in the tradition of the Hollywood Sex Sirene and most reflects the films conscience evocation of the women's picture of the Forties. Warhol seems to believe that one of the biggest errors the film community has made was the shift in emphasis from the star to the director and here he attempts to evoke a time when films were primarily a performers' medium. The excess of cliches, the need for excessive portrayal, and the frequent forays into bathos are endemic qualities of the films Women In Revolt satirizes. This is uncontrollable even as she attempts to keep minutes of a Lib meeting; Jackie's coy seduction of Mr. America; Candy's plunge into films at a lecherous agent's office all have spontaniety and good humor to accent the already mentioned. And if they, and most of the film, are merely good, Warhol has induced some great moments of satire from his characters and contrived situations. The best is the final scene which features Candy, now a movie star, having an interview with a sexually ambiguous bitch of a reporter from the Sunday Times. The moment is keenly portrayed with uncompromising accuracy as simply from reading the prose in the Times, the scene has a savagely reality. This points to one of Women In Revolt's primary virtues: its lack of subtelty and complete honesty with situations that probably would have been ignored by commercial filmmakers. With three men in the leads it is obvious that this isn't going to be a typical treatment of women's problems in a complex society. Yet the fact that it does succeed without being completely tasteless is no small achievement, and the fact that it is very funny at a time when most Hollywood comedies are dreary is worth taking note.

Ms. Solanas shot Warhol because he was, to use the vernacular, part of the white male power superiority syndrome, which is to say a few degrees left of John Wayne. It is doubtful, though, that Warhol will win any Oscars, support the Armed Services, or be much of a popular film favorite. He has never made films for mass appeal. They could be labeled simply "closet films;" crudely made, amateurish and academic exercises in filmmaking. If, though, Women In Revolt Like Trash is any example of what direction the Factory is moving towards, then perhaps the underground film may find a respectable mass audience and Holly Woodlawn could eventually win an Oscar instead of Goldie Hawn.

An additional note. This weekend at Smith The Conformist is to be shown. A dazzling blend of psychological characterization and political intrigue worked through complex visual montage. As directed by Bernardo Bertolucci, the film remains a superlative example of the cinema's art of recreating the past, here Italy during the late Thirties, and building character and situation to a shocking climax. The Conformist was far and away the best foreign film of the year.

There is though, a word of warning. For some unaccountable reason, this film is being shown in more than three unauthorized versions. They have been edited with little respect to content. Although this is uncertain, there is a definite possibility that this Conformist contains cuts which Bertolucci had no authorization over. If certain elements in the film, then, do not cohese or remain vague, blame the distributor not the filmmaker. It is one of the most complete works of cinematic art, John Simon to the contrary, to appear on the screen in the past decade.

Music

UMass Symphony Orchestra

A variety of performing mediums and musical styles will mark the concert program of the UMass Symphony Orchestra at 8:15 p.m. tonight (Wednesday) in Bowker Auditorium, UMass. There is no charge for the concert.

Appearing with the Symphony Orchestra will be vocalists Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John d'Armand, bass. All are members of the UMass music faculty. The University Chorus, directed by Alan Harler, will also perform.

The program will include: Manfredini's "Concerto for Two Trumpets, Strings, Clavicembalo, and Organ," featuring student soloists Robert Amato and Douglas Purcell; Britten's "Simple Symphony for String Orchestra;" Stravinsky's "Symphonies of Wind Instruments;" and Bach's "Cantata No. 130-Herr Gott, Dich Loben Alle Wir," featuring the chorus and solo vocalists.

Ronald Steele, associate professor of music, will conduct the orchestra. He founded the orchestra in 1963 as a 27-piece string ensemble, which has tripled in size with members from the area colleges and communities.

Theater

Canterbury Tales

The UMass Theatre will close out is 1971-72 season with a theatrical event that most theatre goers seldom have the opportunity of participating in, the world premiere of a theatrical production. On May 4-6 and 11-13 8:30 p.m., Bartlett Auditorium, The UMass theatre will present Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, from a production concept arrived at by Marya Bednerik and Janet Craft.

Six of Chaucer's most popular tales are explored. They are the world famous Wife of Bath's, The Prioress's, The Millers's, The Pardoner's, The Clerk's and The Merchant's.

Working with only six performers enables the ensemble to display a variety of talents in a variety of roles. Each performer singularly and in ensemble is given the opportunity to explore the dramatic possibilities of Chaucer's poetry through dance, movement and voice. The method of working on Canterbury Tales is untraditional in that the performers are led to their themes by improvisational work.

The Hostage

Brendan Benan's swaggering Irish play, a witty and irreverent account of the Irish Rebellion, will be given three performances this weekend, tonight, tomorrow and Sunday evening at 8:15 at the LabTheatre, Mt. Holyoke. ($)

A Clockwork Orange (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)

Stanley Kubrick's masterful and devastating "horrorshow" of our immediate future deals with a society where criminals are subjected to behavior conditioning that strips them of their free will. The story concerns a juvenile delinquent thirty years hence and how his exploits lead him to become a dupe for both psychologogists and politicians. This young man, Alex, has three primal drives: violence, rape, and Beethoven, specifically the Ninth, and spends most of his free time participating in his obsessions. Kubrick's sense of photography is more acute than ever before in this film, and his settings and characterizations are perfect renditions of Burgess's futuristic world. Malcolm McDowell's brilliant portrayal of Alex, and sadistic young hoodlum adds the final touches of strength and glamour needed to perfect this astonishing film. Some of his technical effects are equally astonishing; his use of music, for instance, approaches uncanny heights as Rossini the hoodlums fight to music of Rossini and Alex fantasizes and is later conditioned to Hoag-synthesized Beethoven. Kubrick blends all his elements to a devastating anti-human statement, one which singes with cold, clean ironic contrasts and makes for simply the most interesting, thought provoking, and visually mesmerizing experiences since his 2001.

A Day At The Races and A Night At The Opera
(Paris Cinema, West Springfield)

"Either the man is dead or my watch has stopped," says Groucho Marx as Hugo Z. Hackenbush; a horse doctor posing as a fashionable neurologist, in the first title, a completely captivating 1937 comedy. It all has something to do with a sanatorium, a group of bankers, a blonde siren, and a steeplechase and a cast which included Margaret Dumont, Maureen O'Sullivan, and Allan Jones. The film, though, is stolen by Groucho.

The second has the Marx Brothers in probably their finest film. The quartet take on culture, specifically opera and do what needed to be done to "Il Trovatore" in the first place. A wonderful film.

A Man For All Seasons (Campus Cinemas Hadley)

Robert Bolt's literate drama about the martyrdom of Sir Thomas More was made by Fred Zinnermam into a colorful, respectable, if not a bit too controlled, pageant. The acting is superb; with Paul Schofield recreating his stage role as Henry, and assisted by a first rate ensemble, including Robert Shaw as Henry, Leo McKern as the wily Cromwell, and Vanessa Redgrave briefly seen as the breathtaking Anne Boleyn. The moral battle between Henry and Thomas is eloquently presented, but occasionally reflects too much of its stage sources. Winner of the Best Picture of Film Critics and the Academy Awards in 1966.

A Thousand Clowns (Saturday, Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke, 8)

Herb Gardner adapted his own hit Broadway play into an endearing film which concerns a TV writer who is being investigated by Child Welfare to determine his fitness as guardian of his twelve-year-old nephew. Jason Robards is excellent as the television writer and Barbara Harris glows in a supporting role. The script itself is funny and touching without being contrived and corny, the performances good, and the film itself an unappreciated delight.

The Carey Treatment (Calvin Theater, Northampton)
A pretty insipid private-detective story about a pathologist at a Boston hospital who forsakes his career to save the honor of an eminent colleague accused of mortally wounding a fifteen-year-old girl with an illegal abortion. Directed by Blake Edwards, the film merges monotony and confusion with equal measure; some of this is due, though, to the fact that the studio rather unkindly edited the film meaningless. Still it didn't seem much to begin with. The major plot is rather ludicruous and isn't helped much by the abominable performance of James Coburn in the lead and the secondary plot involving Jennifer O'Neill, who is finding it difficult to smile without seeming wooden.

Concert For the Bangla-Desh (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)
The filmed concert of last August's monumental music event, with George Harrison, Leon Russell, Bob Dylan, Ringo Starr, and Ravi Shankar amongst other "superstars." Although the idea of recording the concert has become dearth for many filmgoers, from all reports, the film is faithful, sometimes exciting, nearly always first-rate rendering of a historic popular event.

The Conformist (Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 7, 9:30)
A dazzling film; one of the year's best. An exquisite and evocative mosaic of a young man's sexual and political conformity during Mussolini's Italy. It is visually stunning, beautifully acted, and gloriously mounted, evoking the feel of the Thirties as no other film in recent memory has been able to achieve. Jean-Louis Trintignant is the young man who compelled to conform that he becomes a political assassin. The film reaks of the baroque as numerous sexual and social themes are intricately interlaced in this completely engrossing and mature work by one of Italy's finest young directors, Bernardo Bertolucci. In Italian, subtitles.

Dirty Harry (Hadley Drive-In, Hadley)
Detective Comics in Panavision with Clint Eastwood as a San Franciscan counterpart to crime-fighting the super-hero comic strip characters. A shrewd, taut, well-made thriller that pits Eastwood as Dirty Harry against insane murdered named Scorpio. Harry is something to be seen as he single-handedly quenches a bank robbery without even sweating and Scorpio often does Harry one better in this sharp fantasy thriller. The theme of the film is simplistic dribble about how liberals are responsible for letting culprits like Scorpio out on the streets and the message may be laid on a bit too thick at the end, still those apparent flaws are all but glossed over under the firm, ingenious hand of director Don Seigel.

Fiddler on the Roof (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
A mundane version of the longest running musical in Broadway history. The disappointing epic comes away by director Norman Jewison who has employed needless flashy techniques in the transition. The musical becomes bottom-heavy and static when blown up on a Super Panavision screen and blasted out of twelve stereo speakers. The show itself has grace, charm, and a natural warmth that are all but eliminated here. Instead every moment reeks with phony folklines and cornball routines. The excellent Bock-Harnick score has been homogenized in musical interludes embarrassing at best, even Topol, generally considered the best of the stage Tevye's, becomes a glaring caricature of a poor, Russian peasant. An over-rated, ill-conceived, charmless musical; with Norma Crane as the dutiful Goldie, and Molly Picon as Yente the Matchmaker.

The Godfather (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Mario Puzo's sprawling bestseller reaches the screen as one of the most impressive and satisfying American films in quite some time. It is literally a cornucopia of everything a social drama should be filled with. A strong plot, nostaligic settings, warmth, and violence. Francis Ford Copolla, the film revives the seemingly lost genre of the gangster films and does so with what may be best labled the biggest of them all. Nearly every last piece of Puzo's mammoth chronicle of the rise of an Italian Crime syndicate is present in this spectacularly refreshing three-hour entertainment. The film also marks the return of Marlon Brando as one of our leading film actors in the titled role, and the supporting performances from Al Pacino to Sterling Hayden, are all equally fine. The film, like The Last Picture Show, shocks us into realizing just how good old-fashioned, straight-forwrd narrative can be.

Gone With The Wind (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
This romantic historical pageant of the Civil War is remembered by many as the best film of all time. It crystallized an entire generation's idea of what a romance should be, full of color, character, and action. David O. Selznick mounted this gigantic production is association with MGM and utilized three directors (Victor Fleming takes the credit and the Oscar for Best Director in 1939), many of Hollywood's finest technicians, perhaps the most splendid color photography up until the time, and a cast that was chosen with impeccable care. Clark Gable plays Rhett Butler, Vivien Leigh played the memorable Scarlett O'Hara (and copped an Oscar, and featured in the huge cast are Olivia DeHavilland, Leslie Howard, and Butterfly McQueen, whose part as the maid only showed the Hollywood wasn't quite as intelligent as we may wish to remember.

Is There Sex After Death (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
An amateurish, occasionally funny documentary satire about American sexual mores. Much of the humor is overdone, some of the sequences are overly drawn out, and a good many fall flat. Its best moments, are most unexpected and devoid of the subject matter the film seems so compelled to treat with humor. Occasionally the humor breaks with a fine, incisive glint. Especially when in the sex clinic or strolling through a park talking with old people, or as best shown in the finale, an international sex bowl involving five couples incompetive copulation. Featuring, in cameo parts, Holly Woodlawn, Buck Henry, and Robert Downey.

The Last Picture Show (Academy of Music, Northampton, Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
The Best American Film of last year is this depressing, bleak vision of life about the coming of age of three youngsters in a small Texas town in 1951. Directed by Peter Bogdanovich the film is a straightforward well crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in Hollywood directors. The film is nostalgia in the negative sense and despite some near melodramatic plotting is the most poignant film in quite some time. The acting is superb by a cast of mostly unknown character actors led by Cloris Leachmen, Timothy Bottoms, Jeff Bridges, Eileen Brennan, and Ben Johnson.

Macbeth (Wednesday, Academy of Music, Northampton)
Roman Polanski has recreated Shakespeare's classic story of murder, guilt and revenge with a flamboyant style that includes his own imaginative touches as well as a traditional rendition of plot. The film is visually stunning, but often astonishingly gory. Polanski revels in the grotesque with his usage of nude, misshapen witches, and in the sensual with his Lady Macbeth who sleepwalks in the nude. The acting, for the most part, is extremely well done, but without the dynamic force or strength of conviction necessary to do justice to Shakespeare's masterpiece.

Mary, Queen of Scots (Wednesday, Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Vanessa Redgrave and Glenda Jackson are the main reasons for seeing this historical pageant based upon the legendary rivalry between the two claimants to the British throne. The performances are joyful, sometimes seriously, sometimes in campy good humor, to watch; Redgrave is stunning as the doomed Mary and Glenda Jackson appears like a latter day Bette Davis as the cruel, calculating Elizabeth. The rest of this Hal Wallis production is leadened with an inaccurate and inept script, poor production design (much of the film appears out of some Hollywood historical parody), and even the flat, boring direction of Charles Jarrott.

The Point (Friday, Campus Center Auditorium, 6:30, 8, 9:30, 11)
A delightful animated fantasy which had its origins on television last spring and, thankfully, is making a return on the commerical circuit. The story concerns a young boy and his non-conformity in an imaginary land of imaginary pointed-head beings. The humor is often deft and clever, the images interesting, and the pleasurable music score by Nillson makes this cartoon far and away the best in recent years.

Fritz, the bewildered hero of Fritz the Cat, a film which looks to be one of the best of the year and in release this spring.

Nicholas and Alexandria (Palace, West Springfield)
A rich, long, respectful, expensive spectacle which may impress you with regal elegance if it doesn't bore you to death first. Franklin Schaffner, who won an Oscar last year for his sweeping direction of Patton, comes back in a restrained manner that's as dull as it is controlled. The last of the Czars, Nicholas and Alexandria, live in comfortable ennui far from the storm brewing outside and this is where the film fails. Instead of compelling history, we have, at best, paltry soap opera masquerading for the real thing. Spectacular enough to hold interest yet hardly compelling enough for all the effort involved.

Tora?! Tora! Tora! (Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton)
Twentieth Century Fox's mammoth interpretation of Pearl Harbor completely lacks any dramatic value as a human drama or a historical reconstruction. An attempt at merging Japanese and American filmmakers that seems more an exercise in tedium than good international relations.

Whats Up Doc? (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)
Peter Bogdanovich's second sucessful attempt at recreating the great style of the classic Hollywood directors, this time the witty, sophisticated comedies of Thirties. Here the director is Howard Hawkes and the film What's Up Doc? exemplifies most is his Bringing Up Baby. The plots are nearly the same; in the earlier version Cary Grant played a scatterbrained young man who becomes romantically intrigued with the sophisticated Katherine Hepburn. In this recreation, Ryan O'Neal and Barbra Streisand attempt to replace these two masters at sophisticated comedy and fail quite simply in the process. Their failure at imitation though is refreshing and allows for their innate charms to shine, as does the comedy which is a supple blend of the sophisticated and slapstick and from the opening title sequence featuring Streisand singing Cole Porter's "You're the Top" and ends with Porky Pig saying, "That's all folks." The film is a reverent vibrant evocation of the great Hollywood comedies.

Worth Looking For

Fritz The Cat
R. Crumb's satiric comic strip has been transformed into a biting, funny, gloriously entertaining and brilliantly executed cartoon satire. The story concerns Fritz's wandering through the radical politics of the mid-Sixties, from his days at NYU through his dropping and alliance with radical Weathermen in California. The film takes a healthy perspective on the counter-culture while being a scathing, deliberately effective attack upon its lunatic fringe. The filmmakers have a rich ear for the clinches of the time and have fashioned them into a hilarious, pointed cartoon.

Gumshoe
Albert Finney as a Sam-Spadeish detective in a fine, funny, tough mystery. It is a tribute to the Bogart protype private eye that has Finney as a small time bingo caller who suddenly finds himself in the thick of intrigue and danger. An often dandy tribute to a kind of film which has all but been lost.

J. W. Coop
Cliff Robegson's first attempt at writing, directing, and starring in a feature film and from most reports the film is an often tough, very well made look at the present-day rodeo circuit in the American Southwest. When, as a good many feature films do, it attempts to portray the struggle between a man and his role in life, the film becomes a victim of self-indulgent excesses. Still well-worth seeing for the hard, honest, documentary-like quality to the hero's Coop's environment.

Le Boucher
Claude Chabrol's latest mystery is again focused on character nuance rather than situation; it is an esquisite intellectual thriller about a small-town love affair between a sophisticated teacher and a thick-headed butcher who may or may not be a murderer. Well-acted and engaging.

Play It Again Sam
Tributes to Bogart are coming from all around today and this latest comedy by Woody Allen is, by far, the most entertaining. Although not quite as personally luny as Bananas, the comedy again features Allen as a shmuck hero who finds everything's wrong, except in his dreams. Here he fantasizes what Bogart would do in given situations and the interplay between the mundand and etherial makes for the funniest film so far this year.

Slaughterhouse Five
The first Vonnegut novel to come to the screen and the results are fitfully uneven and annoying. The story itself is a masterpiece of imagination and skill, involving the transformation of a World War Two medic, named Billy Pilgrim, into a functioning member of a futuristic society's middle class. The film, though, has a difficult time working with the complexities of the situations and comes off a bit too stylized for its own good. Directed by George Roy Hill the film has one breathtaking sequence, that is the American soldiers occupation of Dresden which is so well-photographed as to make this film worth seeing.

The Sorrow And The Pity
An extraordinary four hour documentary Nazi-occupied France which centers in on one city in the country and follows, through interviews, film and written records, the effect the occupation had upon the city and what meaning it has today. It is a remarkable blend of the past and present which, despite its massive size, is a probing, moving film.

Letters To The Editor

Is An F Better Than A D?

To the Editor
"A grade of 'D' will lower my 'cume'; perhaps it's better if I take an F which doesn't count. Think twice before making a decision if this thought crosses your mind.

After you receive your degree your cumulative average is known only if your academic record is reviewed. Anyone who examines your transcript is going to see the F's, and it is unlikely that he will bother to determine whether or not any F's are included in the calculations of the cumulative average.

The new regulations which eliminate the F from the cumulative average also require that a student earn a minimum of 12 gradu; tion credits each semester to continue in "academic good standing." Furthermore, 120 credits are still required for graduation. There is still a penalty associated with a failure!

How much will a D hurt your average? The answer is dependent, in part, upon your record to date, but let's assume that you have a 2.00 cumulative average based upon 45 credits and will earn a C in four 3-credit courses this semester. A D in the fifth course this semester will give you a 1.80 semester average and a 1.95 cumulative average, both of which entitle you to continued enrollment in "academic good standing." Furthermore, you are not faced with making up graduation credits.

No one will argue that a D looks good on your academic record, but there are many reasons for believing that it is still to be preferred to a failure.

No Confidence

To the Editor:
There was a meeting of the general faculty on Thursday morning. They passed two technical motions and they managed to, in effect, waste a total of more than two hours.

The reason I say wasted time was because the end result was another delay on the infamous athletic council amendments. I'm afraid that any confidence I had in the rational thinking of some faculty members have been reduced to nil.

The students, through all channels (that is 2 faculty Senate committees, 2 Faculty Senate meetings, 2 general faculty meetings, and innumerable ad hoc committee meetings), tried to reasonably move for change through democratic means.

Students in general realize that democracy does not mean winning all the time, as was so ridiculously proposed at the faculty meeting. It does mean government for the people, with a sense of equality for all concerned. I sincerely wish that some faculty members would look at a dictionary sometimes before the next vote (now postponed until Fall, 1972, due to parliamentary procedures and dilatory amendments) and examine the meaning of the word. Other words to look up might be "fair", "reasonable", and "responsive."

This letter is not directed at the entire faculty. There are some faculty members on this campus who are outstanding in many ways in their attempts to listen to all sides with a clear mind. This note is directed rather at those one-issue, close-minded individuals that take heed only to self-interests. I hope that the summer session has a helpful impact on all. Have a peaceful summer; see you in September.

John J. Hogan, Speaker
Student Senate

Box Scores

To the Editor:
The other day, I was in the Hatch with a few friends discussing the UMass basketball team. After a short time, we found ourselves lost and unclear on many points. We had no facts on which to base our opinions and decided that this problem could be solved very easily if there were box scores in the Collegian; if not for each game, then maybe on a week to week basis. I'm sure that this would not entail a great deal of work or space. A box scere is an essential part of any sports page, as it is quite informative and can give the reader an idea of who's doing what, in a nutshell.

The current season is almost over, but this is something to think about next year. If box scores aren't included next year, my friends and I will have to turn our discussions towards such trivial matters as politics, strikes, etc.

Steve Schwartz

Hawks And Doves

To the Editor:
Nixon Madman-President loses mind over war-These and other sensational claims have appeared over the last few days as the war moves into its most crucial phase. While agreeing with those people who have used such phrases as to the crucial nature of the next few weeks and months, we must fundamentally dispute the theory that the war is based on the individual idiosyncracies of our President. This war is NOT the war of an individual or a set of individuals but is the product of the inner dynamic of the capitalist system; i.e., the desperate need for the conquest of new and more profitable markets.

From its inception, the war in Indochina was an imperialist war and as the Pentagon papers clearly showed the Eisenhower, JFK, Johnson, and Nixon administrations have been concerned less with the red, white and blue of freedom and liberty as the green and black of the dollar bill. We cannot hope to solve any problem without understanding its inner dynamics and therefore we must be especially careful to guard against the latest "explanation" of the war in terms of the individual mind, for the obvious conclusion that can be drawn from this analysis is that if we can repace the mind we can end the causes of this war. This is fundamentally incorrect. The McGoverns, Muskies, and Kennedys are as incapable of altering the basic course of capitalism as King Canute was of holding back the sea. This war and the other wars in Africa, Latin America, Asia, and here at home will only be ended when the system that causes them is ended, not when we replace the "hawks with the doves".

Register Again

To the Editor:
Any student who wishes to vote in the Massachusetts Primary on September 25, 1972 must register to vote before leaving for the summer. Even if the 30 day residency requirement becomes law, students will not be back on campus in time to register before the primary. So, if you expect to express your preference in September, Register to vote NOW!

A Drug Primer

To the Editor:
On July 1, 1972 Massachusetts' new drug law, "The Controlled Substance Act", will be in effect. The most notable changes are the elimination of the crime of knowingly being present where a narcotic is illegally kept (except in the case of heroin) and the general reduction in penalties. A salient feature is the law's general mandate that marijuana be treated by probation and without penalty for first offenses except for unique circumstances. I have prepared a brief resume of the new law's penalty provisions for ready reference of those who may find it useful. It must be noted that this is an extract and as such it is not substitute for the full text of the law; it may be inaccurate for special cases; and the judge retains considerable discretion in its administration. The governing statute is Massachusetts General Laws, Chapter 94C sections 32 (manufacture, distribution, dispensing and possessing with intent...) 34 (simple possession) and 35 (presence of heroin). Persons who have ever had a narcotics conviction under old or new laws may be treated as second offenders and second offenses may be treated as if both (or all) offenses related to heroin in the event either the first or later offense involves heroin. In short, no matter how one views the use of chemicals in the present setting, the law is only somewhat progressive and retains many stern characteristics. It is well to keep in mind that everything else notwithstanding, the inescapable serious fact about drug use and abuse is the law. I hope this extract will help to keep people aware of that fact.

MDC Comics Rate High

By DON SAIT—PIERRE

Last weeks Collegian Readership Survey once again revealed that the Comics are the most read section of this newspaper.

A similar survey held last year reported the same thing.

Then, apparently after getting their laughs, students turn to the Editorial pages, as that was the next section in the popularity poll.

The survey returned about 200 ballots, there were over 15,000 Collegians distributed that day, and of those returned only 169 were valid. Ballots were invalidated for using incorrect procedure such as making more than one choice for each section.

The least read section of the paper, based on figures derived from using a formula which gives numerical value for the amount each section is read, were Amherst news stories followed by the Crossword Puzzle.

Some people noted on their ballots that they felt the puzzles were too simple.

The following formula was used in computing the results of the survey: the total votes for each section were totaled, after which the "Never" totals were multiplied by 1, "Sometimes" by 2, "Often" by 3, and the total "Always" votes were multiplied by 4.

In rating the overall performance of the Collegian and Poor Richard's students called the Collegian "Good" and Poor Richard's "Fair".

Specifically, the Collegian received 24 Poor votes, 83 Fair votes and 62 Excellent votes. Poor Richard's received 42 Poor votes, 86 Fair votes and 4 Excellent votes.

The following is the complete listing of all the sections in the survey in the order of their popularity. The number indicates the sections numerical value based on the formula mentioned above.

House Approves Wage Increase

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House Thursday approved a two-step increase in the minimum wage to $2 an hour, rejecting a proposal to make the jump immediately and extend coverage to 5.8 million additional workers.

The bill passed by the House would raise the present $1.60 minimum to $1.80 within two months after enactment, and to $2 a year later. Lower rates would be set for teenagers and farm workers.

The measure goes to the Senate where a bill raising the minimum to $2.20 an hour this year and expanding the coverage is awaiting final action by the Senate Labor Committee.

The House vote was a victory for the administration and a setback for the Democratic leadership, which had made the $2 minimum now, and the extension of coverage to government employes and household domestics a key part of its legislative program.

Rep. John B. Anderson, R—Ill., who offered the amendment to stretch out the $2 rate until next year, said an immediate boost, amounting a 25 percent increase, would "completely gut" the 5.5 per cent guideline for pay raises set by the Pay Board.

Don't Forget Belongings

Before you pack all your belongings to go home make sure that you have everything. What about the red scarf your grandmother made for you at Christmas or those glasses that cost so much?

Don't wait until you get home before you realize that your text and notebook have dissappeared and you can't study for exams. Even though your ears are in no danger of freezing in this weather (or are they?) you might regret not having your white fluffy hat next winter.

If your mother waits at the door with a check list in hand to make sure that you have come home with everything you left with, don't disappoint her. Remember you have to live with her all summer.

Come visit the people at Lost and Found. We want you to go home with everything to. Campus Center Lost & Found bottom of the escalator. We will be open to serve you until May 28. Open 8 A.M. to 10 P.M. Monday thru Saturday; Sunday, 1-10 P.M.

Hurn New Master Of The Hill

Associate Provost Robert Woodbury announced today the appointment of Christopher J. Hurn as the new Master of Orchard Hill Residential College. Leon Barron, Master of Orchard Hill since 1968, resigned several months ago in order to return to teaching in the English Department.

A Search Committee chaired by Professor Ann Brentlinger and composed of students and faculty from Orchard Hill as well as students and faculty from the larger campus spent several months reviewing potential candidates for the position. Professor Hurn was one of their recommendations.

Mr. Hurn will be coming to UMass from the University of California, Berkeley where he currently as Assistant Professor of Sociology and Acting Director of the Residential Program. Born and raised in London, Mr. Hurn completed his undergraduate work at the London School of Economics and Political Science and his Masters and Ph.D. degrees at Northwestern University.

Berkeley's residential program is a two year academic program which allows students to live together and take the major part of their course work together in a residence hall exclusive to program participants. Students can choose a multidisciplinary "Program in History and Literature" involving faculty from History, Art, Music, Comparative Literature and English or a program in "Technology, Art and Society" which will attempt to examine twentieth century sensibility and culture with the participation of faculty from Physics, Computer Science, Mathematics, Art, Sociology, Philosophy, Comparative Literature and Film.

The program has been very successful at Berkeley and Mr. Hurn hopes to encourage similar multidiciplinary efforts in Orchard Hill Residential College.

Mr. Hurn will, according to Associate Provost Woodbury, build upon the strong academic program and effective liging-learning atmosphere of Orchard Hill and provide new opportunities for Hill students to become involved in their education.

Sunbathing In Nude Is In

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Nudes may not outnumber scuba divers and surfers on California's public beaches, but they definitely, ah, are beginning to be seen.

On warm weekends, hundreds show up at semisecluded spots along the coast. They're generally ignored by authorities and, for that matter, by bathers in suits.

One such beach is Pirate's Cove, near Malibu, north of Los Angeles. It can be reached by walking over a small hill.

On a recent weekend, the crowd hit 1,000 at Pirate's Cove. Most of the bathers were nude. Men outnumbered women about 2 to 1. There were many families, their children cavorting on the sparkling white sand and playing in the surf.

"It feels good to have the sun all over your body," observed a young man with shoulder-length blonde hair, lounging with a group of other nude youths. "you go up and talk to a chick and you're naked and she's naked, so you make nothing of it."

Phi Beta Kappa Initiation Held

The Nu Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa initiated 113 undergraduates and four faculty members yesterday in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Of the 113 undergraduates, 24 have been pledged as juniors and the remainder as seniors. The four faculty are Professors Doris Abramson of speech, Oswald Tippo of botany, Donald Fairbairn of zoology and Sidney Kaplan of English. The first two were initiated as alumni members of Nu Chapter and the others as honorary members.

The speaker at the ceremony was Dr. Carl Swanson, professor of botany and associate director of the Institute for Man and his Environment. Dr. Swanson is a nationally-known cytogeneticist and educator and a former professor and dean at Johns Hopkins University. He is a UMass graduate with a Ph.D. from Harvard University. A reception for initiates and guests followed the ceremony.

The junior initiates, whose cumulative averages run from 4.0 to 3.75 are: Elizabet J. Anderson, Virginia A. Bachand, Matthew A. Bonn, Maria D. Calagione, Bruce E. Colton, Dunn Fong, Helena M. Franze, Marylouise Gill, Bradford M. Goff, Faye R. Halpern, Elizabeth J. Hingston, Andrew S. Jacob, Kevin J. Kevit, Charles F. Knappe, Woon S. Kwok, Susan N. Lajoie, Margaret A. Lilly, Wendy A. Moffitt, Bruce A. Murphy, Leslie N. Rutstein, Christine T. Stier, Janice E. Trout, Gary W. Twardzik and Ellen A. Vanslette.

NKrumah Memorial To Be Held Sunday

The African, Afro-American and Progressive community here at Amherst will be holding a Traditional Memorial in remembrance of Dr. Nkrumah on Sunday May 14th in the Campus Center Auditorium, University of Mass. at 12:30 p.m.

The ceremony includes readings from Dr. Nkrumah's writings; and those scheduled to speak include Nana Nketsia; former Cultural Advisor to the late President and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Ghana, Dr. Asa Davis who spent twelve years in Africa, when he met Nkrumah and got involved in his efforts, Dr. Johnetta Cole who has been to Africa and is conversant with Nkrumah's contribution to the freedom struggle; Brother Kotsho Dube, former Zapu (Rhodesia) Representative in Africa, Europe and the USA who met Dr. Nkrumah in Ghana and or OAU conferences.

BDIC Now Permanent

A special bachelor's degree program which enables students to follow customer-styled curriculums has been made a permanent part of UMass.

UMass Trustees established the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) Wednesday, at a meeting here.

BDIC began two years ago as an experiment which would give undergraduates flexibility to design their own major programs as alternatives to standard majors. The first year, 60 students enrolled to study such things as East Asia journalism, folklore, and medical illustration. Enrollment has gone up to 134 students, and the diversity of programs continues.

Though the special studies are flexible and cross over academic departments, they are supervised by faculty members. Each student has a faculty sponsor who helps develop the major. Students must meet all University core requirements and submit two written reports each semester to the BDIC Supervising Committee of three faculty members-Prof. W. Leigh Short of chemical engineering, Assoc. Prof. Anthony Borton of veterinary and animal sciences, and Assoc. Prof. Arthur F. Kinney of English.

BDIC students are selected not for their grades, but for goals and proposed courses of study, and for the University's facilities to meet these.

One student's major is "sociological aspects of food resources," and courses for one semester were in food science and technology, nutrition and food, public health, and sociology. Says the student, "...I want to work in a low-income area, preferably rural, in this country or possibly on an international level. ...(So) I want to gain a knowledge of foods and food preservation, nutrition, agricultural techniques, sanitation, and population problems."

Area Graduate Advisor Positions Open For Fall

Applications are currently available in the Student Activities Office in the Campus Center for positions as Student Activities residence area graduate advisors for 1972-73.

Any full-time graduate student is eligible for consideration for these positions, which are designed to assist students in the residence areas with cultural, educational, social, governmental, and social action activities.

Detailed information and job description are available in the Student Activies Office.

Deadline for submission of applications is Friday, May 26, 1972 in the Student Activities Office.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

I continue to sort through an avalanche of mail concerning Leo- and I must report that I am startled, amazed and stunned at the viciousness of attacks against that zodiacal sign. Throughout my years in astrology, I have found Leo to be somewhat aggressive, but fun-loving, creative and entertaining, despite a streak of obstinancy. However, I am having some second thoughts. Surely, the readers who have deluged me with opinions about Leo cannot all be prejudiced or malicious. Or can they? I appeal to you, my invisible friends, to set me straight. Is Leo really such a scourge?

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Money decisions made now will favor you- but you must take initiative. Don't "give in" to those who would stall, delay or invent excuses. Get accounting. Take new path. Be direct, self-reliant.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your hunch rings bell of accuracy. Follow through despite misgivings which may be expressed by family member or associate. Now is time to heed your own counsel. Make contacts and take initiative.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Leave details to others-or for another time. See project as a whole. Get overall picture. Study potential. Fine now for vacation travel. Sagittarian plays significant role. Be optimistic-display sense of humor.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): If thorough, you can achieve goal. Be careful with apparent minor details. Friends can offer encouragement. But you must make final decision, choice. Some restrictions will be removed. Know if and plan accordingly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Changes help advance career, ambitions. Open lines of communication. Prestige can rise. Key is to be affirmative. Throw off the negative and accent the positive. Complaining now goes against grain of those in authority.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What you do now will have much bearing on future. Weigh moves, actions. What you ask for is likely to be received. Word to wise here should be sufficient. Stakes are high- money management is a necessity.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Interest in the occult is accented. You probe the unknown. Now you can perceive. See beyond the obvious. What was obscured is clarified. Policies, documents related to inheritance-these are in picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): What you agreed to do must now be done. Means you pay the piper. Don't attempt to elude responsibilities. Mate, partner is very much in picture. Capricorn could play prominent role. Be a shrewd observer.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Pets, dependents, occupy attention. You draw to you those who require special services, attention. By knowing yourself, you also will know others. Message will become increasingly clear.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Good lunar aspect now coincides with times when children, persons young in heart come into your life. Leo figures prominently. Bring forth creative abilities, imprint your own style, do what comes naturally.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The end, the completion of efforts and assignments-this is highlighted. You work for what you get- but what you do obtain will be worthwhile. Don't duck issues. Face facts as they actually exist.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may be trying to be too many places at once. Key is to be true to your own feelings. Trying to please or placate neighbors, relatives could rain energy for naught. Know it and pull in reins.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have delightful sense of humor. You often scatter your forces. You are finishing important phase, by August you will receive reward. Special relationship is under pressure.

Crew Ends Long Season

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Whew! A long season and a short semester comes to the close today, as the Crew team levels to Philadelphia for the Dad Vail Championship. Most of the top schools, notably Ivy League are in the Eastern Sprints, but thirty five schools are entered with Coast Guard, a two length victor over UMass a few weeks ago, the early favorite.

Eight men rowing in unison to the gutteral tones of the helmsmen typified a usual afternoon or morning of practice. Basically a club activity, the rowers went to work early with most of them on their own or in small groups keeping in shape throughout the winter. Running up and down the Southwest tower stairs- 1,000, 1,001. Waking early on a fine spring morning to row up and down the Connecticut before classes. Chipping in approximately $75 per man to supplement the Athletic Council budget. Needless to say, dedication shown through, especially during Spring vacation, while most students were relaxing, they were rowing double sessions at Princeton.

To match the dedication of the oarsmen is the work of Coach Mike Faherty. Mike, as he is known to all who are associated with him, has worked very hard to further the Crew program at UMass. The searching eyes of Coach Faherty introduced shell racing to Lake Wickabog under the co-sponsorship of the Lake Wickabog Boat Club. Great spectator viewing and the promise of topflight competition were the major factors influencing the brand new course. A new program offering Crew racing for women has also been introduced. Mike took the responsibility of advertising the fact to the female population. Over forty women appeared at the initial practices.

When someone tries to give Mike credit for what he has done, he passes them on to the Crew members. The Crew budget of $8800 leaves much to be desired, since it covers the coach's salary as well as boat expenses. When asked about this, Mike said, "Crew is a club activity and therefore does not receive as much as some of the other sports." He thinks that rowing should be brought to the students and feels that if they were unwilling to pay for it, then the rowers would do so themselves. This is already happening somewhat, as the Crew squad pays most of their traveling and meal expenses. Alumni have returned to watch and donate towards equipment.

Coach Mike Faherty has done much for UMass and he is leaving after this season for bigger and better things. Also, making their farewell appearances are the three Seniors, Bob Jayes, Chris Hodson and Rick Jones. Though their record is only 1-3, there may be a few surprises near the Liberty Bell, as the Redmen have faced some of the toughest units in the East. While MIT, NU and the Ivies collide in the Eastern Sprints, the Redmen will be competing with some of the best shells in their class, for a change.

Netmen Finish 9-2

By STEVE FERBER

Coach Kosakowski's netmen have never lost to Springfield College, so why should be this year any different? The answer is: it shouldn't, and the result proved: that it wasn't. 5-4 was the score of the final match of the year for UMass, as second doubles team Ted Donahue and Chris Coffin put the Chiefs away 6-4, 6-7, 6-4 to give the netmen an overall 9-2 seasonal mark.

Today its on to the New Englands, where Coach Kosakowski says, "It will all depend on the draw. Realistically if we get a good draw we can do very well, but let's face it we'll not one of the top clubs so we'll need help."

UMass will go with their Yankee Conference lineup in the New Englands, which will feature Ted Donahue at number one. Donahue put together a double win vs. Springfield as he was the sole Redmen to win at both singles and doubles. Gary Ney, another winner against the Chiefs will be at number two. Right on down the line its Fred Braley at three, with Steve Ferber at four. The latter two played third doubles yesterday and emerged victorious (its about time guys) with a 6-1, 7-6 win.

Mark Brass will be at number five, and right behind is Robert Schpeiser, the only undefeated single man. Mike Phillips, Schpeiser's double partner, will be looking to go far at third doubles in this weekend's tournament.

"Its been a helluva season," reflected Kosakowski. "We lost to MIT 6-3 and UConn 5-4, both were away matches, thus we really came close to going all the way without a loss."

When asked about his players Kosakowski remarked, "They're a nice bunch of kids to work with and I'm looking forward to having all of them back next year."

As for the new tennis courts; Oh you didn't know. Well supposedly they're building some new ones down near the baseball field. They say they'll have 12 ready sometime summer, but THEY say alot of things. Meanwhile Coach Kosakowski isn't highly excited over the fact that has yet to be consulted on their construction. Said he, "I'm not responsible for any part of them. Whether good or bad I'm not taking any claim. Foul balls from baseball are going over there like bombs over Hanoi, and I'd like to know, with all the land on this campus, who decided to put them there."

As for the surface, two are going to be dynaturf, which is supposed to be one of the best synthetic surfaces. However they have not been tested outdoors in the New England area.

"If nothing else they should be the windiest courts in New England," declared Kosakowski. "So hopefully we'll get some wind screens up. But can you imagine, the baseball coach had to inform me where the courts were being built and when."

Rugby Tourney Here

BY ROY LYONS

UMass will host the third annual New England Rugby Tournament this weekend with action slated to get underway at 9 o'clock Saturday morning. A total of twenty-two teams will be competing in the single elimination tourney with two games scheduled concurrently throughout the day Saturday to accomodate the large field of entrants. The rugby fields are adjacent to each other and are located near the varsity and jayvee baseball diamonds.

The Redmen sporting a 5-2-1 mark, are scheduled to play in a game which will begin at noon Saturday. If they can win in that bracket against either URI or Concord, N.H., they'll play a second round match later in the afternoon.

The semi-final matches will be played on Sunday morning at 10:30 with the winners vying for the championship at 2:30 in the afternoon. The two previous New England tournaments have produced the best rugby of the season, and indications are that this season will be no exception.

Someone Loves JV Lacrosse

BY MARTY KELLEY

Spiced with their own sense of individuality, undaunted against the political pressures of sport, uncommonly alive with personality and the wit and wisdom of a wild warrior, free and expressive to the wind, snow, sun, and rain; the JV lacrosse team trudges on.

Yes, lacrosse, minor league style, does exist on the campus of UMass. At times it's been porous, and at others pretty as a picture, but for those who have participated in the rather unique sporting experience, one can say it's been real, at times quite frustrating, and yet at other points in time, JV lacrosse has been as pure, unpolitical, a aesthethic and as pure a sporting experience as can be. Most of all, it's been fun.

For those who suffer the daily rigors of JV lacrosse, the will to win exists but yet a lot of individuals are rather frustrated athletes who are filling a bill to participate in the sport experience. Some actively seek out the day when they'll be running a third midfield against Brown for the New England title. Others seek out the challenge that the sport projects while some see no future in the game at all and simply looking for the fun and good times the game affords for the present.

Take for instance senior co-captain Joe O'Brien. Yes, "OB" is a senior, he'll never see the likes of Brown or Harvard for all the marbles. "I just picked up a stick my sophomore year," he says, "and was sick most of my junior year so here I am. But I love the game." When Joe graduates in June he'll take a lot of fond memories with him but he'll surely remember the old days of sifting through two or three Amherst College defensemen for a shorthanded goali.

For the likes of junior Paul Maluzzi, there is no real future in the UMass lacrosse system. Paul will be student teaching in Denver next semester and may probably trade his cradle in for a ski poll. Working on weekends really didn't help this advocate, but "Maluze" made up one of the more international midfield units ever to hit the ethnic lacrosse circles. They called themselves the Italian Stallions and their repetoire lists the likes of a well-used midfield line of "Maluze", junior Ken Marciano, and junior Bobby Moro.

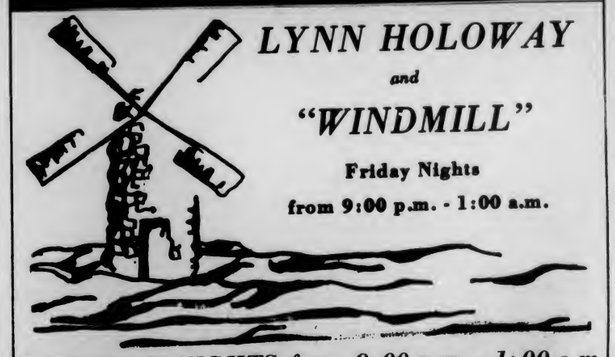
Personality and not unadultrated talent personifies the squad. Co-captain Dave Barry along with midfielders Larry Knowlton, Stan Olchawski, attackmen Dave Dibble, Richie McManus, and perhaps Ken Marciano and Bobby Moro will be given a long look for a shot at the big time, but for most of the corps that made up this year's 3-3 squad, the bright lights of the varsity are long hours away.

Kappy's Kidds are many hours of sweat away. And starting goalies "Red" King and away from a home and a companionship that they have found in the sporting experience of JV lacrosse.

It's been a strange year, it's been a fun year, and without a doubt, although a few "chimps" have hung up their cradles for bigger and better things-perhaps books or perhaps the freedom of belonging to the world outside that white helmet. But when the season ends tomorrow against none other then New England's best JV power, Brown University, the "chimps will be putting everything on the line.

For the likes of a Steve Parsons, or a Dave Boudreau, or an Emmet Powers (football's answer to a renegade), a trial period has ended. The big question: Where do the borderline bodies go? I'd like to enumerate the names of all those who made their presence known, but those who went through the motions this spring know that pride and determination will bring them all back together again this fall after hours and hours of running through the woods dodging the branches with their barbaric looking craddles.

It's been an up and down season for the most part, but for those who have braved the rain at Amherst College, the mud at Williams, the sparse, unknowledgeable gatherings at home, and the classes gladly missed for a ride to UConn, which the team jester, "Sweepstakes", couldn't attend, then you know that there's a lot to be said for the final game tomorrow.



Maybe it will be said with a win or perhaps with a loss, but whatever, the "chimps" are going to walk off that field with smiles on their faces, abide in team party festivities at "Rockies" and go into the final exam period knowing that no matter how badly they do on the "quizzes", they'll go home with memories of a funny spring, but in some small context the "chimps", of the spring of 1972 were champions.

Sure you heard "Thick as a Brick," NRPS, and Hot Tuna here first. But if you don't like Jethro Tull, Jerry Garcia or Rock Music, you probably won't like us. If you like hearing new albums first, you've found a new summer friend.

All good music, all summer, for the first time.

Bruins: Champions

NEW YORK (AP) - Sensational Bobby Orr scored one goal and assisted on another as the Boston Bruins rode the shutout goal tending of Gerry Cheevers to a 3-0 victory over New York Thursday night, clinching their second Stanley Cup in the last three seasons.

Orr, who led all scorers in the National Hockey League playoffs with 24 points, connected on a power-play goal midway through the first period and the Bruins protected the lead until Wayne Cashman tapped Orr's slapshot into the net for the first of his two third-period goals.

The opening 10 minutes of the game were played much like a heavyweight championship fight with the two teams feeling each other out cautiously.

When Walt Tkaczuk drew a penalty at 10:25, the Bruins sent out their power-play unit. New York's Bruce McGregor narrowly missed clearing the puck over the Ranger blue line as Orr stopped him.

Our Boston defenseman sidestepped McGregor and let fly with a shot that zipped past Ranger goalie Gilles Villemure.

The Bruins protected the 1-0 lead tenaciously through the scoreless second period and even went 48 seconds with two men in the penalty box.

As the third period began, New York had two excellent opportunities but Cheevers gloved Pete Stemkowski's slapshot and moments later Vic Hadfield's rebound attempt rolled harmlessly past the corner of the Boston net.

Ranger defenseman Dale Rolfe went off for holding at 3:20 and with only 10 seconds left in his penalty, Orr and the Bruins struck again.

Phil Esposito won a faceoff from Tkaczuk in the Ranger end, getting the puck to Orr. Bobby took two steps in and fired with Cashman tipping it into the net.

As the clock ticked off the final minutes, the Rangers tried desperately to beat Cheevers but instead it was the Bruins who scored.

Cashman jammed a short shot past Villemure with only 1:49 to play, sealing the Rangers' fate.

Ah, The UConn Series

By BILL BALLOU

The news from Springfield wasn't particularly good, but then again, it wasn't the Springfield game that's going to go down in history as the game of the year. That game, or games will be coming up this weekend against UConn.

The Redmen lost to the Springfield Chiefs yesterday by a score of 4-0, as they were two-hit by Joe Kubeck. Kubeck had a no-hitter going into the sixth, but Dan Kelly and Pete Backstrom came up with hits before rain stopped the game in the eight inning.

Springfield got all four runs in the sixth inning as UMass used several different pitchers along the way in an attempt to give as many people as possible work before the UConn series.

Yes, the UConn series.

The situation stands this way. UMass must win both the game here Saturday and the game at UConn Sunday to tie the Huskies for top spot in the Yankee Conference. If UMass does win two, they will be co-champs with UConn. But, the two teams will then have to play off for the right to get into the District 1 playoffs as the representative of the YanCon. So the whole thing amounts to this: UMass must beat UConn three times in succession in order to make the District I playoffs. Just one loss and they're out.

Dick Bergquist thinks the Redmen can take the Huskies this weekend. He said that "I went down Wednesday and scouted them against BC, and to tell you the truth, I really think we're a better ballclub than they are. Now it's up to us to go out there and prove it by beating them."

Bergquist plans to take the games one at a time, so that only thing definite that he can say about who'll pitch when is that Mike Flanagan will start Saturday. From there he'll see how things develop and play it by ear.

UConn will start Brian Herosian on Saturday and go with Jim Jachym Sunday. Both are tough customers. The Redmen hit well against New Hampshire, but the long layoff may have affected their batting eye. Bergquist can only hope the eye sharpens by Saturday.

This should be the weekend of the year as far as baseball goes up here. The Redmen, with their backs to the wall, have nothing to hold back and so will be playing all out. Connecticut is undefeated in YanCon play and with Herosian and Jachym their front-line pitching is as good as any. If it gets down to a test of pitching depth then UMass will gain the advantage. But they must have the offense to do anything.

Gorillas Assured Post Season Bid

By HOWIE BLOOM

All that's left now is for the official word to come from somewhere advising Coach Dick Garber and his Gorillas of their invitation to the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association championship playoffs. Word will probably be received this afternoon, but UMass has already been assured of a berth in the tourney by its director, Jim Bedell, who told Coach Garber that the Redmen would likely be seeded third or fourth in the playoff.

Other teams likely to receive invitations include Washington and Lee, Cortland, Hobart, Towson, Washington College Dennison, Adelphi, Farleigh Dickinson, Delaware, and Franklin and Marshall. In all, 12 teams will be invited, with 2 teams from each of 4 regions (New England, New York, South, Midwest) and four independents to be invited. The tourney will probably be played at Hofstra University on Long Island.

What's fouling up the selection committee is the fact that the selection committee for the other post-season lacrosse tourney, the NCAA championspp, won't be making their selections until Sunday, and teams like Cortland and Hobart, who this season have both beaten Cornell, last year's NCAA champ, think they might receive bids to play in that tourney, too. If they do, they'll choose the NCAA championship over USILA playoff.

Another playoff of sorts is coming up in a few weeks--the annual North-South All-Star game, which features the best seniors from across the country. Last year the North defeated the South (they did it in the Civil War, and they did it again) at Tufts University in Medford, Mass. Lou Marinacci and Phil Sheridan were the Gorilla representatives for the classic. This year's all stars have yet to be chosen, but UMass has four players in the running--Charlie Hardy, John Nagle, Paul Ritch, and Bruce Crawford. All have been nominated and will probably find out within a week whether or not they'll be playing in this year's edition, which will be held at Hobart College in Geneva, New York on June 10th. Have a good summer.

Runners At Rhody

By MDC STAFF

Great cliche, (right Marty?) but it gets the job done.

Season number two for the UMass track team gets underway tomorrow and completes itself next Saturday right here on Campus at the Llewelyn Derby track.

For starters the Redmen travel to Rhode Island tomorrow for the Yankee Conference Championships. And for the first time since the creation of dirt tracks the New England's will be held at UMass next Saturday beginning at 11.

Both championships are expected to result in two team races...in both meets the Redmen are one of the two.

Tomorrow they share the bill with UConn. There's nothing uncommon with this match-up.

Although the tracksters handily defeated the Huskies here last week, coach Ken O'Brien insists that this doesn't make his team the clear cut favorite.

As for next Saturday the Redmen are the major challengers to Northeastern's hopes of continuing its dominance over New England track.

O'Brien feels that both his team and the Huskies (NU style) are good for 15 places out of 20 or so events. It remains to see which team takes the higher places and what other teams dig in to both teams points.

The Agents Of Psych

By EARLE BARROLL

They're agents of the word "psycho".

With a constant bombardment of rythmic verbiage they intend to catalyze the crowds.

But, for the UMass cheerleaders all of the above has been a great challenge to them.

Probably the key term here is "unity". At football games there are bands of it all over the place: the parents in one section, the Patriots roaming the sidelines, Cold Duck popping their corks from section five.

As Kris Fletcher, a veteran of this past year, says, "There is unity in the crowds we cheer in front of at the stadium, but it is difficult to control them.

"As cheerleaders we perform to the atmosphere that prevails. (Nothing like a cold, bare, colorless stadium to stimulate the fans) Spirit can only be led by the cheerleaders. We can only lead the enthusiasm. But there has to be unity and we can't start from zero.

"It cannot be everyone doing his own thing. Everyone has to be in the same direction."

It is no secret that cheerleading at UMass has come under heavy scrutiny in the past couple of years. Perhaps the main forum for this has been Curry Hicks Cage. And it certainly is a coincidence that Julius Erving happened to perform there for two years.

Players, coaches, officials, the press, cheerleaders...they were all one of the crowd. Who needed cheerleaders? A one-handed rebound was all it took to unify the masses. A year later, number 32 is not there, but the impact he left on the crowd instilled an intense "home-court" force.

Marie Romanus, co-captain for next year, admits, "It's a real challenge to cheer in front of UMass crowds and it's really something when they don't boo. But we do have good and bad games just like the basketball team does."

But the past is behind and Marie was quick to guarantee an upswing for next season. "With a new band director we'll try to coordinate ourselves with the band. There'll be a different style of music to appeal to the larger majority.

"We intend to have more movement, do more dynamic things. The cheerleaders are in charge of the half-time at basketball games. Next year we'll be having a variety of shows including gymnasts and karate experts to go along with our routines."

This summer Marie will be a National Cheerleader Instructor for the International Cheerleading Foundation. In the last week of July she'll begin a month long tour of the western United States beginning at Boulder, Colorado.

This is indeed a major step for UMass cheerleading.

UConn has sent a girl each year to the west coast and she in term has brought back an enormous amount of new material.

For Marie, her last stop is U.C.L.A.

Maybe she'll bring back Bill Walton.

Please Play For Us

By DAN KAMAL

"Hey, man, how ya doin? You're the guy they've been trying to get to come here for almost two years, right?"

"Yeah, it was between this place and about forty others."

Wha

"What made you choose this one?"

"Well you know how it is; you went through the recruiting bit. You gotta keep holdin out. You gotta make them keep coming after you. You know, until the little ones start droppin out. Then you choose between the couple of real big ones that are left."

"Yeah, I know what you mean. I couldn't resist when they flashed the spending money in front of my eyes. And that car! Man I couldn't pass that up. I would have said yes right then, but they still kept making offers, so I still kept listening and making believe I was still thinking about another place. Then they said they'd pay a whole year's rent on an apartment for me. And then they told my folks they could each have six free round-trip tickets down here. I had to laugh at that. That's two-thousand miles each way, man! I said okay right then; I felt sorry for them."

"You shouldn't have stopped there. I was sold on this place the minute they showed me the arena. That arena plus all the national coverage they get at this place was plenty for me. But they kept coming."

"What did they end up giving you?"

"They started out with the regular stuff--the car, the spending money, the apartment. So I kept listening, and they kept talking. Then I told them that I needed time to think it over, you know, to see how far they'd really go. They told me I could have all the time I wanted. They flew me back home and told me whenever I decided that I should call and they'd fly me back. When I saw the school pep band at the airport to see me off, and when I saw the banners telling me how much this place needed me, I knew for sure i'd be coming here, and I also knew for sure they weren't done."

"What did they offer you when you came down here again?"

"I told them my old man loved the sea and always wanted a boat. My old man is now the bewildered owner of a 16 foot yacht. He couldn't believe it, but I still wasn't done yet. I told them that it was about time my folks had a decent place to live, so they offered a brand new seven-room house. They only offered this because they were expecting me to reach a definte decision. I figured it was about time, so I said yeah I'd come here.

"Did they come through on the house?"

"Yeah, my folks moved in last month. It's a nice little place. They're happy. I feel kinda bad though."

"Why?"

"The rent on my apartment got doubled last week. I don't know how they're gonna take it."

Vital N. Viet Bridge Cut

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. warplanes have cut the heart of North Vietnam's supply network by destroying the Thanh Hoa "Dragon's Jaw" bridge 80 miles south of Hanoi, the 7th Air Force announced Sunday. It said the bridge had stood for seven years, despite repeated air attacks, as "a symbol of invincibility and a challenge to U.S. pilots."

Officials also reported that North Vietnamese rail links with China had been cut in places and that a key railroad bridge on the edge of Hanoi had been wrecked by air strikes.

The aim of the attacks was to sever some of North Vietnam's land routes for supplies while its ports are mined in a U.S. effort to cut down supplies from across the sea.

On the ground in South Vietnam, fighting picked up in the central highlands and the northern sector, but eased up around An Loc, 60 miles north of Saigon.

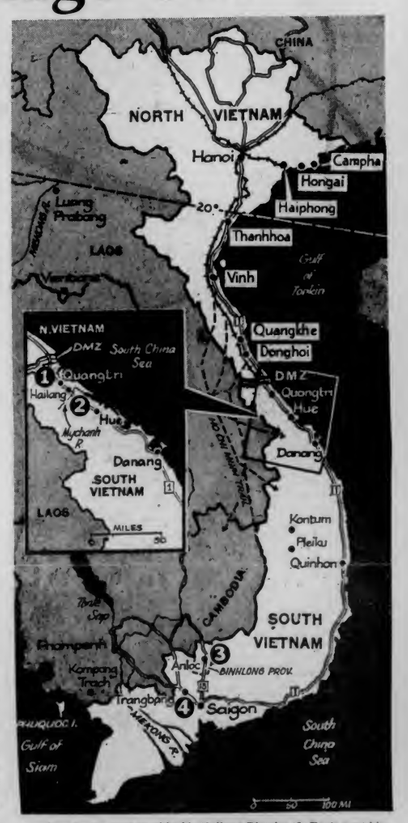
Fighting was reported continuing around Kontum in the central highlands shortly before midnight, but the South Vietnamese said that North Vietnamese forces were being contained. North Vietnamese forces had launched heavy tank, infantry and artillery assaults just before dawn against the outer defenses of Kontum. The enemy shelled South Vietnam's northernmost front with heavy, long-range guns.

The renewed assaults could signal that the North Vietnamese are ready to launch the third phase of their 46-day offensive. Thousands of South Vietnamese reinforcements were rushed to the Kontum defense line, and pushed the North Vietnamese back about a mile. Kontum city and Hue, 20 miles below the northern defense line, are said to be key North Vietnamese objectives.

The lower house of the National Assembly in Saigon approved a proposal giving President Nguyen Van Thieu "full power" to deal with the enemy offensive.

The 7th Air Force said the destruction of the Thanh Hoa bridge, 80 miles south of Thanh Hoa bridge, 80 miles south of Hanoi on Saturday "represents a significant air interdiction accomplishment."

"The combination railway and highway bridge spanned the Song Ma River and was a key link in the major North Vietnam supply line from the Hanoi-Haipong area south to the DMZ," the announcement said.



The DMZ is the demilitarized zone between the two Vietnams.

Officials also reported that both the northeast and northwest rail lines linking Hanoi with China, a supplier of arms and ammunition had been cut at various points and several spans of the early mile-long Paul Doumer railroad causeway bridge on the northern edge of Hanoi wrecked.

It was believed that the aerial campaign ordered last Monday by President Nixon against North Vietnam's supply lines would have no immediate effect on the offensive in the South. Sources said the North Vietnamese have stockpiled enough weapons and ammunition in the area just above the DMZ and in Laos to keep the offensive going for an unspecified period of time.

North Vietnam can also be expected to mobilize tens of thousands of laborers-such as they did during the 1965-68 bombing campaign-to repair rail lines and bridges destroyed or damaged by U.S air raids. The North Vietnamese have greatly expanded their transportation system during

Thieu Given Crisis Powers

SAIGON (AP)-The lower house of South Vietnam's National Assembly approved a controversial proposal Sunday to give President Nguyen Van Thieu "full powers" to deal with the crisis resulting from North Vietnam's general offensive.

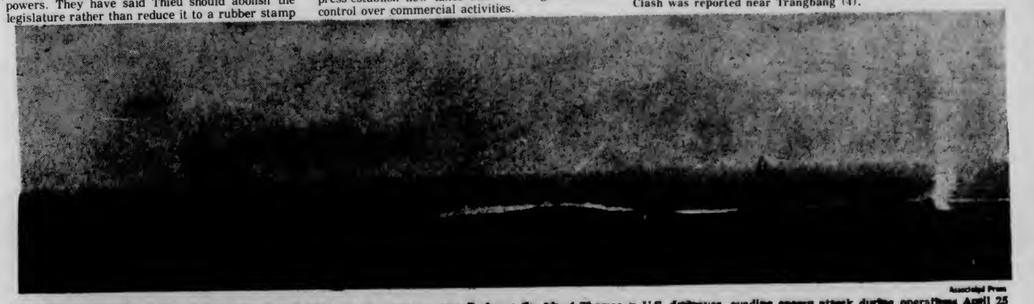
Turning aside charges by opposition deputies that Thieu seeks to become a dictator, the house voted 61 to 49 in favor of the bill and sent it to the Senate. Twenty-nine members were absent.

The bill would give Thieu sweeping powers to issue laws by decree for six months on almost any subject, and would, in effect, give legislative sanction to a series of emergency measures, including martial law, that he already has ordered.

As approved, the bill would allow Thieu "the power to promulgate by decree laws necessary to cope with the national situation," except for ratification of treaties and agreements, declarations of war and negotiations for peace.

The vote came in a seven-hour special session that began with 28 opposition deputies staging a half-hour sit-in demonstration on the lower house steps to protest Thieu's demand.

Opponements claim the bill would make Thieu a dicator and would asurp the National Assembly's powers. They have said Thieu should abolish the legislature rather than reduce it to a rubber stamp body with no power.



Police were present but made no move to break up the sit-in. It went virtually unnoticed by thousands of persons thronging a park a short block away for the formal opening of a large display of captured enemy arms and equipment including two North Vietnamese tanks seized in Quang Tri Province before it fell.

Many of the emergency measures newly invoked by Thieu technically already are in effect from declarations of past years, but are not being strictly applied.

These include the right of police to search premises at any time, a ban on hoarding, strikes and unauthorized demonstrations, and the seizure of published material and arrest of persons deemed dangerous to national security or public order.

The martial law edict, issued last Wednesday, in effect suspended civil law and put the country under military control. Thieu also has expanded military draft eligibility, closed universities, technical schools and most forms of entertainment and tightened curfews.

There has been speculation that if Thieu's bill is approved he will move to suspend all civil rights, impose strict censorship-possibly even on the foreign press-establish new taxes and extend government control over commercial activities.

French Reporter In Hanoi: Reacts Against N. Vietnamese

PARIS (AP)-Claude Julien, orrespondent of Le Monde in anoi, said Saturday he refused to ttend a news conference at which merican prisoners of war were ommenting on the bombing of orth Vietnam.

Julien, in a dispatch from Hanoi, wrote: "I refused to attend the show involving these men, prisoners at least since last February, and one of them since 1967. Their text was already broadcast around the world. If they're presented to the public, it's because they're presentable. What can they say after months or years of captivity?"

Talking about the bombing, Julien said: "The Vietnamese authorities sometimes give the impression that foreign journalists are here essentially to describe the bombings and they expect something sensational from them. But nothing resembles one bombing more than another one. Under heavy dosage, the alerts become banal. People die, but sometimes in fewer numbers than one would believe. Five died in the village where 25 houses were destroyed because the peasants were in the fields."

Julien said it was "just about impossible" to measure the real effects of the Amerian bombing. He said the Hanoi authorities were extremely discreet about the number of dead and that only the Americans could reply to the question of which targets are being hit.

Klan Burns 30 Crosses

MIAMI (AP)- At least 30 wooden crosses were set ablaze in widely attered sections of Florida late Saturday and early Sunday in what olice sources said was an apparent demonstration of strength by the Ku lux Klan.

Reports indicated that some 15 crosses were burned around Panama ity, a half-dozen around Hollywood, four in Dade County south of Miami, hree in Orange County and two in Polk County.

A policeman in Panama City, who refused to be identified, said, "I eard the Klan decided to set the crosses on fire just to let people know ey're still around and that ther's lots of them. They had hoped for a atewide thing with crosses burning in most counties, but I guess they idn't get it."

A spokesman for the Bay County Sheriff's Department said most of the rosses burned in the area around Panama City were "about 6 feet by 3 eet, and they were set where they wouldn't endanger any property."

Dragon's Jaw Bridge Cut

he more than three years the ountry was free of heavy merican aerial attacks, giving hem alternate routes.

The attacks on the Thanh Hoa ridge were carried out Saturday fternoon by the fastest U.S. ighter-bombers, F4 Phantoms, which dropped laser-guided 2,000 nd 3,000-pound bombs on the 56-oot-wide, 540-foot long bridge. The ridge is named for the Ham Rong, r "dragon's jaw" gorge which it spans. It lies 215 miles north of the DMZ.

Tass, the Soviet news agency reported from Hanoi that two U.S. planes were shot down in the raids. But the Air Force said none was lost, although pilots encountered heavy antiaircraft fire from 37mm and 85 mm guns.

The bridge was a two-span steel through-truss construction with a reinforced concrete center pier and heavy concrete abutments.

Spokesmen said the first attempt to knock out the bridge was made on April 3, 1965, shortly after the initial sustained bombing campaign was ordered by President Lyndon B. Johnson.

Pilots scored direct hits and damaged a large section of the bridge and many bombs went right through it, but the structure remained relatively intact and was repaired.

Many more attempts were made to destroy the bridge until the halt in the bombing of North Vietnam on Nov. 1, 1968, but each time it was repaired.

In a delayed report, the U.S. Command said four Air Force F4 fighters intercepted four MIG 19s Friday while escorting bombers on raids in the vicinity of the Yen Bai Airfield, 50 miles northwest of Hanoi. The command said one of the MIGs were downed. All of the U.S. aircraft returned safely to their bases. It was the 25th MIG reported shot down by U.S. fighters this year and the 136th of the war.

The command also announced that an Air Force light observation plane was shot down Sunday a mile south of the besieged provincial capital of An Loc, 60 miles north of Saigon. The pilot was rescued.

Associated Press correspondent David J. Paine reported from Pleiku that two South Vietnamese infantry regiments, or up to 4,000 troops, bypassed Fire Base November which is about three miles north of Kontum.

The Saigon command claimed 173 North Vietnamese troops were killed, many of them slain under a hail of bombs and artillery shells. South Vietnamese spokesmen at Pleiku said 11 tanks were destroyed.

Initial reports said five South Vietnamese soldiers were killed and 14 wounded.

The North Vietnamese assault force was pushed back about a mile and the heavy fighting had tapered off by noon.

Only light fighting was reported at mid-afternoon Sunday.

Scores of U.S. and South Vietnamese warplanes raked North Vietnamese positions.

On the far northern front, Associated Press correspondent Peter Arnett reported that several rounds of 130mm heavy artillery fire exploded on both sides of Highway 1 just south of the My Canh defense line, 20 miles north of Hue and 30 miles below the DMZ. The targets may have been two ammunition trucks moving north on the highway. They were believed to have gotten through the fire.

North Vietnamese 130mm guns, which have a range of 17 miles, also opened fire on two South Vietnamese marine headquarters elements at My Chanh.

The artillery bombardment came as the South Vietnamese marines ended a 36-hour raid into North Vietnamese-held territory at Hai Lang, five miles north of My Chanh. The South Vietnamese marines freed a number of civilians, then swept southward on foot back to My Chanh, encountering little resistance.

U. S. Blockade May Be Illegal

WASHINGTON (AP) — An international covenant signed by the United States expressly prohibits the mining of an enemy's coast solely to keep him from getting supplies by sea.

The current mining of North Vietnamese waters by the United States is aimed at cutting off war supplies. But President Nixon apparently has left himself a loophole by including Hanoi's navy among the targets of his officially proclaimed blockade.

Nixon made no bones about the fact that the mining was aimed at tankers and freighters when he announced the action Monday night, but mining aimed exclusively at such ships would be an illegal form of blockade.

The prohibition is contained in Article II of Hague Convention VIII, signed by the U.S. delegation to the Second Hague Conference, ratified by the Senate and in effect since Feb. 28, 1910.

"It is forbidden to lay automatic contact mines off the coast and ports of the enemy with the sole object of intercepting commerical shipping," the article states.

It remains in effect and is the basis of accepted international law on the subject.

This provision was generally held in light esteem in international legal circles because no belligerent nation was expected to concede that it was laying mines solely to stop merchant vessels rather than warships.

The practice has been to lay mines to stop naval ships, and if incidentally stopped too, that was perfectly legal. Not until President Nixon's announcement Monday night had any nation acknowledged this kind of mining primarily to stop merchant ships.

NIXON FINDS A LOOPHOLE

But Nixon said in his announcement that "All entrances to North Vietnamese ports will be mined to prevent access to these ports and North Vietnamese naval operations from these ports."

That reference to naval operations saved the mining operation from becoming clearly illegal under international law and U.S. treaty commitments.

The declaration of purpose, howevever, was only one of several areas where there seemed to be some confusion if not tightrope-walking on international law.

NO BLOCKADE?

For one thing there was no mention of the word "blockade," and the government insists there is no blockade.

"A blockade involves stopping and searching vessels and that's not involved here," chief Pentagon spokesman Daniel Z. Henkin told the press.

But mining has long been recognized in international law as a form of blockading and regulations have been set up to govern its conduct.

The VIII Hague Convention was addressed to this very situation and Germany's blockading of Britain in both World Wars depended on mines as well as the more-publicized submarines.

And while the government did not call its new action a blockade, it followed pecisely the required procedures for setting one up. International law requires that the blockading nation inform the neutral nations of the date the blockade begins, the geographical limits of the blockaded area and the period granted neutral vessels to leave the blockaded port.

The United States formally notified other nations of the mining operations, defined the mined areas and announced that neutrals would have three daylight periods to get out.

NO BASISIN LAW

Defense Secretary Melvin Laird also raised the point that the United States was not blockading because it was limiting its action to the territorial waters of North Vietnam. But this has no basis in international law.

Blockading originally was always done close in but the development of improved shore defenses, torpedoes and submarines forced blockaders to work farther out.

Blockading from too far out, in the sense of stopping ships anywhere on the seas is illegal.

Article 19 of the Declaration of London, signed in 1909, provides that "neutral vessels may not be captured for breach of bloackade except within the area of operations of the warships detailed to render the blockade effective."

Another problem with not calling mining a blockade is that it does not altogether evade the responsibilities of a blockade. The Declaration of Paris of 1856 says that a blockade "must be maintained by a force sufficient really to prevent access to the coast of the enemy."

The administration may be playing with fire by playing with semantics over the Vietnamese mining operation. For example, while insisting it isn't blockading North Vietnam, it is leaving open the option of stopping and searching neutral ships.

The problem with this is that the United States must proclaim a blockade and warn neutrals before it starts stopping any ships. To do so without observing the formalities of admitting a blockade could even be taken as an act of war by the offended neutral.

Threatening, or implying, a blockadae without acutally backing it up is called a "paper blockade" and is outlawed by the Declaration of Paris.

The government's purpose in playing with labels is concededly to avoid just such legal technicalities and the confrontation with neutrals they entail.

"What we're doing has the same effect as a blockade," a State Department legal expert said. "But it doesn't raise these elements.

"A blockade entitles you to do certain things which we're not doing. Therefore, it is not a blockade."

The right of a nation to stop shipping to and from an enemy country is firmly established in international law and practice. But it is a wartime practice, complicated here because no legal war exists between the United States and North Vietnam.

Here, too, the blockade becomes important because it carries a certain recognition and status and belligerency. This blockade may be the closest thing we have to a declaration of war.

Town Dumps On Freaks

GLASTONBURY, England (AP)-The Town Council, fearful of an invasion this summer like the one that brought 16,000 youngsters tramping into the district last year, is dumping sewage around tents and caravans of Jesus freaks.

But the youths refuse to move.

Taj Drexel, an 18-year-old girl who lives in a caravan on the outskirts of town, where legend has it Jesus Christ visited in his youth, said: I've been in poor health since the council dumped the stuff. It's enough to make anyone sick. But Glastonbury is a religious place for us and I've heard the angels singing here. We'll just sit tight."

Town Clerk George Harland explained: "The dumping is a preventive action. We've been warned that this summer the town will be invaded by hundreds of hippies.

"They can be a danger to health."

Seven Days 4,800 Feet Under The Earth

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP) — It was a $1,000 week for Ron Flory and Tom Wilkinson. But their agony and uncertainty cannot be measured in dollars and cents.

Flory, 28, and Wilkinson, 29, spent the seven days beginning May 2 crouched down in the Sunshine Silver Mine shafts, 4,800 feet below the surface, tapping water from pipes and eating from the lunch buckets of their fellow workers who died. "I am not a praying man," said Flory, "but I prayed a lot down there."

There were 201 men on duty when fire broke out and sent deadly smoke and carbon monoxide billowing through the 100 miles of mine tunnels. One hundred-eight miners escaped immediately; 91 died, some so quickly their bodies were found with partly eaten sandwiches.

Marvin C. Chase, general manager of the now shut-down mine, gave the $1,000 bonuses to Flory and Wilkinson, found after seven days in isolation. The two men, who have been work buddies for almost two years, declined comment on the money.

Flory, the father of a 2-year-old girl, said he would never mine again; Wilkinson, who has a son and a daughter, said he didn't know what he would do.

Flory and Wilkinson were working near the bottom of the No. 12 shaft when the fire broke out higher up in the shaft. The men raced for the elevator station.

"We got up to the lift station and several buddies were already there," Flory said. "Some were watching for the cage. One was listening on the phone. They tried to get respirators to everybody. The smoke just got so thick we had to keep moving back. Tom Wilkinson was gonna get on the phone and tell supervisors at the upper levels where we were gonna be and everything and they just didn't make it."

Wilkinson passed out and was taken along the tunnel on top of a motorized ore car. He related later:

"I was kind of delirious and they put me down on the ground, kept talking to me and telling me I was all right and I was in good air. My partner Flory went back out and told them there was good air and to get back there. Ron stayed and Dick unidentified said he would get the others back to us.

"Dick went out there and he never came back. Ron said 'I'm gonna find out what's wrong' and he started walking out. He came back and says, 'They're laying all over' so I jumped on the motor, and I says, 'Let's go,' and we went out of there.

"First one we seen was Dick. We just grabbed him and drug him back down the track. He was gone. It looked like somebody had fallen off the ore car, and they all got off and tried to help and none of them made it."

There were seven bodies. Flory and Wilkinson said they were unable to help them so they took the lunch buckets and retreated with the ore car.

They went back about 1,500 feet into the tunnel to a drill station, a small room where drill bits are kept. They shut the steel doors behind them and remained there most of the time.

Once they walked through a dark No. 12 shaft offshoot and found a telephone on a pile of rubble.

"The line was dead," Wilkinson said.

The phone had been dropped down the shaft by rescue crews from the Bureau of Mines, but the wire snagged on a rock outcropping and was cut.

"We kept up each other's spirits," Flory recalled. "One man would get down and the other would talk him out of it. We were scared for a whole week, but we never really gave up hope until about a half hour before we were rescued."

Flory said that for a while he kept hearing voices in the dark, "but Tom didn't hear them. So when I first heard banging on the pipes I didn't believe it."

The banging came from a two-man team which inched down a narrow ventilator shaft in a bullet-shaped "torpedo" cylinder.

"We banged back, and pretty soon we really did hear voices," Flory continued. "We hollered back, and pretty soon we saw flashing lights."

The pair signalled with the headlight on the ore car, the only light they had. The battery had held out all week.

Weak but not too badly off, they walked with the help of the rescuers about 2,500 feet to the torpedo.

Flory was the first to reach the safety of the main shaft. Asked if he wanted to go straight up, he replied, "No, I want to wait for my buddy."

The men came out together, still wearing their helmets, and emerged to cheers from the crowd of anxious people for whom this meant hope for their own men. Two days later, it was established that there were no other survivors.

The trip to the surface, Wilkinson said, "was the best ride I ever had."

After describing what went on down there, Wilkinson recalled, almost as an afterthought, "we spent some time just braiding blasting wires. It was something to do with our hands."

Tom Wilkinson, left, and Ron Flory, smile at the 3700 foot level of the Sunshine Silver mine Tuesday night after being rescued from the 4800 foot level where they survived seven days. At least 47 are dead in the mine disaster at Kellogg, Idaho. (AP)

Hue; Waiting For Attack

HUE (AP) - Vietnam's "ancient imperial capital" isn't very ancient and never was very imperial, but holding it at this critical stage in the war means everything to the Saigon government.

If Hue falls, the Communists are sure to proclaim it their liberation capital and seek quick recognition from the Soviet Union and China and a procession of East bloc countries as the lawful government of South Vietnam.

"Then maybe Sweden or France or someone like that will recognize the Viet Cong capital and it'll be a whole new ball game on diplomatic front," said a senior American adviser. "There'll be nobody left in town by that time to choose sides, but you can't underestimate the arrogance of the enemy."

For 25 days in Tet, 1968-from dawn on Jan. 31 to 5 a.m. on Feb. 24-the yellow-starred, blue and red flag of the Viet Cong's National Liberation Front flew from the fortress gate of Hue's moated Citadel. It took three battalions of U.S. Marines and the equivalent of a division of South Vietnamese army troops some of the bloodiest house-to-house fighting of the war to clear the 5,000 enemy from the proud city on LaRiviere des Parfums-the Perfume River.

Thousands died, including 142 U.S. Marines, and for almost a year afterward, the city's schoolyards, parks and nearby sand dunes yielded the bodies of the 3,000 civilians shot, beaten to death or buried alive during the enemy occupation.

Ho Chi Minh went to school here under the name of Nguyen Tat Thanh and was a schoolmate of Pham Van Dong, who became premier of North Vietnam.

Hue's imperial pretensions all along seem to have brought more trouble than its dynasties were worth. The French bombarded the Citadel in 1883 in a rage at the natives. The Viet Minh, mad at the French, burned most of it in 1951. Diem's family rebuilt it, but the Buddhist uprising in Hue in the 1960s began his downfall. In Tet, 1968, more than 14,000 of Hue's 21,000 permanent buildings were destroyed.

Now the refugees are streaming out of Hue again. The bodies of those buried alive in the strawberry patch or behind the Roman Catholic cathedral symbolize more the mood of modern Hue than the tombs of the six Nguyen emperors.

Lt. Gen. Hgo Quang Truong, the new military commander, seems determined to hang on to Hue.

Like Gen. Giap, he is no stranger. Truong was commander of the division that did a lot of the door-to-door fighting in Tet '68. He had his command post in one corner of the Citadel, while the enemy occupied the rest of it.

A lot of lotus blossoms have floated down the 50-foot-wide moat surrounding Hue's mossy Citadel since then. A lot of blood too.

More U.S. Airmen Likely To Be Captured

SAIGON (AP) — On one of the office doors at the U.S. headquarters in a streamer with a message: "Prisoners of war never have a nice day."

A pilot flying raids in the Hanoi area said after his mission, "It felt great to know our prisoners of war might hear the bombs and have a smile on their faces." He was scared, he admitted. A few days later, he went down on another mission, missing, possibly a prisoner himself.

By official count, there are 490 Americans held captive in Indochina, another 1,208 missing. The U.S. air raids over North Vietnam which President Nixon says are aimed at ending the war and bringing home the prisoners may be increasing the number of captives.

When the North Vietnamese launched an invasion across the demilitarized zone into South Vietnam on March 30, Nixon rapidly built up air and naval forces and ordered intensified strikes over the North as well as the South.

In the first six weeks of the offensive, 41 U.S. planes and 38 helicopters have been lost to all causes in Indochina.

Since March 31, the number of Americans listed as being held prisoner in North Vietnam has increased by one to 389, but the numer of missing has jumped from 412 to 423.

In South Vietnam, the number of Americans missing has increased from 456 to 506 since the offensive began. The Pentagon still lists a total of 96 Americans captured in South Vietnam for the war, no change since March 31.

The number of missing in Laos has increased by one to 279, but the number of captured remains unchanged at five.

The number of Americans taken prisoner in North and South Vietnam since the current offensive began is not known.

U.S. officials say there is no responsible way to make an estimate.

Some of the missing, including at least five Americans who were presumed dead after witnesses reported seeing their helicopter explode in the air in flames, have turned up alive. Other are believed dead.

Okinawa Returns

TOKYO (AP) — The 73 islands and one million inhabitants of Okinawa, the last great battlefield of World War II, were returned to Japan Monday after 27 years of American rule.

Ships' whistles, fire sirens and auto horns joined in a joyful welcome in Okinawa as the reversion became law.

Official celebrations here and in Naha, Okinawa's capital, to mark the agreement were following later. Emperor Hirohito, Prime Minister Eisaku Sato and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew were featured speakers at the Tokyo ceremonies.

The Japanese government placed 50,000 riot police on alert, expecting demonstrations by Okinawans resentful of the continuing American military presence and by Japanese opposed to the terms of the reversion agreement.

Eight leftist-run Japanese cities refused to recognize an official half-day holiday for the occasion.

In a communication, published here Sunday, Secretary of State William P. Rogers assured Japan that Okinawa now is free of nuclear arms.

Oppostion parties, continuing their demand for clearer guarantees on removal of nuclear weapons, noted Rogers' letter merely stated: "The assurances of the government of the United States concerning nuclear weapons on Okinawa have been fully carried out."

The Japanese government said this meant nuclear arms were withdrawn.

The islands restored to Japan gird 374 miles of ocean from southern Japan to the northern tip of Taiwan. Known as the Ryukyu Islands, 47 are inhabited.

For millions of Japanese, the reversion represents the end of Japan's postwar dependence on the United States.

The United States seized Okinawa from Japan in the last bloody battle of the Pacific war, March 12- July 2, 1945. American dead totaled 13,000, and 37,000 were wounded. In their stubborn defense of the island chain, Japan lost 110,000 men. A large number of civilians also perished.

The 1951 Japanese peace treaty signed in San Francisco continued U.S. administration while recognizing Japan's residual sovereignty.

Okinawa became a major U.S. forward military base in the Pacific following the Communist victory in China in 1949. It played a key role in the Korean war as well as the Vietnam conflict and was the site of a nuclear weapons stockpile.

In giving up the Pacific base, the United States retains use of the military installations under restricted freedom of action.

Nixon Adroit - Harris

WASHINGTON (AP) — Louis Harris, the pollster, said Sunday he thinks the nation's voters are in an anti-establishment mood, but that President Nixon is so politically adroit and unpredictable he might be re-elected.

"He's been full of surprises and I expect him to have more surprises right up to election day," Harris said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" program.

Harris cited Nixon's shifts on China and wage-price controls as evidence of his ability to do the unorthodox.

"He certainly solidified the country behind his recent moves in Vietnam," Harris said. A Harris poll last week showed that 59 per cent of the country approved the decision to mine North Vietnam's harbors.

Political analyst Richard M. Scammon, who appeared on the show with Harris, said he thought Democrat George McGovern's chances of winning the party's presidential nomination depend on his ability to project himself as a moderate.

"If he is perceived as being on the left, his chances will be very small," Scammon said.
